

after his death, Guiteau was executed. There is no need to dwell upon the incident of this protracted trial—the vast accumulation of evidence important and worthless; the cloud of witnesses; the incessant public discussion; the offensive displays which the prisoner was allowed to make; the experts discrediting one another; the learned disquisitions and the ignorant chatter about the conditions and characteristics of insanity; the inflammatory nonsense that was written and spoken month after month, and the agitating fears that the wretch might ultimately escape through the ingenious imberillities of the law. Justice was done at last, if the final act in such procedure can be called justice.

The trial of Guiteau is vividly recalled because his crime was monumental, but many prosecutions for murder in this country which are well-nigh forgotten have in all their stages lasted longer. It is a serious defect of our judicial procedure that it can be employed, and in cases which develop sensational interest almost invariably is employed, to make conviction of a crime a long and difficult and costly business and to postpone its punishment indefinitely. Beyond a doubt the realization of this fact is producing much popular discontent and inciting a spirit of rebellion against a system which is susceptible of such abuse. We confidently believe that the law's delays, inspiring contempt rather than terror in the minds of criminals and leading to a common apprehension that the guilty may escape, are the chief cause of the prevalence and the audacity of lynchers, and one of the most serious dangers which threaten the stability of American institutions. Judges and lawyers alike admit, more often in private conversation than in public discourse, the reality and the magnitude of this evil. Nor is the administration of the criminal law alone at fault. In civil actions also, and perhaps to an even greater extent though less notoriously, the processes of the courts are so employed as to work substantial injustice. There is urgent if not absolutely imperative need of a radical change. We do not conceal from ourselves that the remedy cannot be easily found. But it ought to be diligently sought.

SAN JUAN STAKE CONFERENCE

The quarterly conference of the San Juan Stake was held at Monticello, San Juan county, Utah, Monday, Aug. 23, 1897. President F. A. Hammond and his first counselor, William Halls, were present; also Elder Levi W. Richards of Salt Lake City, who was out in the interest of the Sabbath schools.

The forenoon was taken up by the Bishops reporting their respective wards. Their reports showed that the San Juan Stake was in a pretty fair condition; that the Saints were improving both temporally and spiritually.

The afternoon was devoted to instructing the Saints by the presidency of the Stake and Elder Levi W. Richards.

Sunday, Aug. 22, was devoted to Sabbath school conference, and Monday evening and Tuesday morning to Y. M. and Y. L. M. I. A. and Primary conferences. There were a fair turnout considering the busy time of the year.

The Spirit of the Lord reigned supreme and it was a very enjoyable time.

CHAS. E. WALTON.

Stake Clerk.

Horses have been regarded lately as of little value as property. But the turn seems to have come, and with it a prospect that the horse is a good animal to ride to wealth on. The promise is for a very lively demand.
