

A lady recently applied to a life insurance company for a position as agent. When asked what her qualifications were she touched her unblushing cheek.

An international chess tournament, for $2,000 in gold (to begin on the 20th July), has been resolved upon as one of the special attractions of the Vienna Fair.

General Beauregard is reported to be growing old very fast. His health is quite infirm, too, owing to the severe taxing of his physical and nervous system during the war.

It is said that one of the elder Bennett's instructions to his reporters was: "Be sure the thing has happened, then write it up with all the sensation you can muster."

One young lady's air castle has faded away. She made it for a young cigar maker, who gave it away as an original present to another girl, who gave it to another fellow who has no one to give it to and don't know what to do with it.

Johnny, the minister's son, went to his father one morning, directly after family worship, saying, "Father, while you were praying, I saw a man stealing grapes." "Well," said the good man, "if you had been praying too, you would not have seen him."

The master of a workhouse in Essex was once called in to act as a chaplain to a dying pauper. The poor soul faintly murmured some hopes of heaven; but this the master abruptly cut short, and warned him to turn his thoughts towards hell. "And thankful you ought to be," said he, "that you have a hell to go to."

In a recent case for assault the defendant pleaded guilty: "I think I must be guilty," he said, "because the plaintiff and I were the only ones in the room, and the first thing I knew was that I was standing up, and he was doubled over the table. You'd better call it guilty."

When a murder is committed in a New York hotel the effect upon the business of the house is good. The Grand Central has prospered wonderfully since Fisk was shot there, and since the murder of Walworth, Sr., by Walworth, Jr., at the Sturtevant House, that hotel has been full to overflowing.

Leavenworth, Kas., must be an awful place in which to live, for only last week a lively, beautiful and talented young lady retired to bed with the bloom of health upon her rosy cheeks, and no thought of impending harm, and in the morning her friends found her pale with the hue of death—and the pillow bore the roses that once reddened her cheeks.

A horse attached to a Springfield milk team ran away the other day, but the driver was a metaphysician, and believed in the force of habit, so he refrained from lacerating his hands by pulling the reins, waited until they came near a house at which the horse was accustomed to stop, and shouted "milk!" whereupon the faithful steed paused, and there was quiet in Springfield.

John Wilkes, the English radical, gave his name to many taverns, and this indication of popularity was not displeasing to him. Once, however, his vanity was a little rebuked, though his love of fun made him give the circumstance currency. He was in a stage-coach with one other passenger, an old lady, when the vehicle stopped under his own portrait. "It seems to me," said Wilkes, fishing for a compliment, "that Wilkes hangs everywhere!" "Yes," said the old lady, "everywhere but where he ought!"

There is a possibility that electricity will take the place of rennet, and work as well. Authorities say that electricity will coagulate milk even faster than rennet, and a cheesemaker, who claims to have used it for the purpose of cheese manufacture, says he has found the curd made by it to cure into fine flavored cheese. He reports it as having extraordinary efficiency in reducing the curd of skim milk into salvy, rich appearing cheese, but it did not restore the flavor that was lost by the removal of the cream. It was said to have just the flavor which the milk in its skimmed or unskimmed condition would have.—Ex.

FOREIGN NOTES.

Edmund Yates says the Austrian infantry have an old-fashioned and formal drill, but that the cavalry are the best riders "across country" of any cavalry he ever saw.

China has been photographed for the first time, in a series of two hundred photographic illustrations, by J. Thomas, an Englishman, who has succeeded in overcoming the shyness and superstition of the natives sufficiently to bring away a gallery of quaint buildings, gorgeous palaces and strange objects. These are accompanied by a book of travel and description.

Close by the seat of Xerxes, in Athens, with its Acropolis, has sprung up a Hellenic Father Hyacinthe, by the name of Dionysios Lacos, whose crowded congregations are the terror of the ultra conservatives, and who may be described as a Greek Protestant. He is a monk who disapproved of asceticism, and seeks to vivify antique forms by infusion of modern vitality. Though not of their type, he has done a great deal to assist the evangelical missionaries of Athens, and to found regular Sunday meetings at the several clubs of the Greek capital.

The fire that not long ago destroyed one of the side chapels of Canterbury Cathedral and the recent burning of Alexandria Palace are attributable directly to the same cause. Plumbers had been employed on the roofs of these edifices without a watch set over them, and their carelessness wrought the ruin. In both cases the fire broke out where the plumbers had been at work, and while they were taking their rest at noon. The radical fault was the absence of proper professional responsibility.

The new Italy doesn't like pilgrims and pilgrimages to Assisi, Del Monte, and other sacred shrines, and the mob, we are told, beats any ill-starred creature who may be caught upon his journey in scallop shells and a big hat. One wayfarer was recently scourged cruelly at Foligno, and another at Rome. The sooner liberality which is thus intolerant finds out its inconsistency and reforms its ways altogether, the better for the cause of real regeneration.

A thoroughly French story reaches us by private letter from Alsace. The writer says: We have found out one very nice way of annoying our oppressors. Very many of the Prussian officers have little white dogs. We catch these little white dogs and color their heads and shoulders red and their hind quarters blue, leaving a white streak in the middle, thus joining the French colors red, white and blue. Then we let the little dog go, and get around and hear the Prussians swear. It makes them very angry indeed.

Mr. Charles Mathews has returned to the London stage, with no indication whatever of fatigue or waning power. He resumed his appearance at the Gaiety Theatre, playing in Foote's comedy, "The Liar," with all the former polish and smooth freedom of manner. The numerous shifts, prevarications and downright falsehoods of Young Widing are rattled off with an ease and felicity which lend an absolute charm to mendacity. Miss Rose Coghlan plays Miss Grantham. Besides "The Liar," the favorite "Patter versus Clatter" has contributed to the enjoyment of the audiences.

A short time since a gentleman with long fair whiskers, and dressed in the height of fashion, entered a hosiery in Vienna and requested the shopwoman, who happened to be alone, to show him some colored shirts. Every variety was brought out, when he made his choice, and requested that a parcel might be made up for him. This being done "What an idiot I am!" he said. "I have not seen how the shirt look when on. Would you oblige me, mademoiselle, by putting on over your dress?" The shop woman having complied with his request, "Be so good," he continued, "as to button the collar and wrist bands, that I may get a thoroughly good idea of the effect." "And now," he added, taking up his parcel "allow me to wish you a very good morning!" and in an instant he was outside the door and had disappeared, the unhappy girl, apparently stupefied, not daring to follow him into the street on account of her singular costume.
