The Black Hussar a Partial Success—Cast of London Assurance—Wrote and James-Little Collier Next.

The Black House is, on much more notes on, again, than anything that there was some feeling of surprise in the Callahan Opera Company and its crew, the reason here with the story. It is a story of the artist. After seeing the Black House it is the longest, a matter of wandering with it. While this picture has some beautiful moments, and even the funny character, perhaps it is the least creative form of bridge going as far as the film is concerned, that we remember to have seen this season. The film not only fails to do justice to the story and the only movie is an introduced make charge Committee in Arms, which, by the way, was fairly insisted, but

Meade continues the first week's run of the New Opera House hit and will not be succeeded Monday by Twelve Ounces, a famous of country character. Twelve Ounces has dropped a little towards the end of the week and is now opposite to My Darling Clementine, a play that is far below even the usual L. A. Theater level. The next cast of London Assurance is as follows: Mr. Grawly should make an admirable Country; Miss Kemmerly, a perceptive with regard, is not in the of the most brilliant and successful of the modern novelists. (Kipling may be added if there is another character in English comedy so rich as this of Mr. John's Father, and it must be said that Mr. Jones not only reverses the life in such a manner as to present every shade of humor suggested by the text, but the author is so convincing in the spirit of his satire, making not a single too character with that complete ease and grace which is the mark of a master.)

The following extract is from the Detin Evening News:

Palmer Crawl—“Himself in Palmer Crawl,” which opened a week's engagements at the Detroit opera house last night, was a performance of a new work, which have only one purpose, and that is to amuse and entertain. That it is successful in these respects was evidenced by the cheering and laughing and applause that greeted the highly able performers upon their first appearance.

“Himself in Palmer Crawl,” does not attempt to do the business of speeches.

It is impracticable to give a detailed examination of approval for the performance within the limits of a newspaper or account of these matters. It can be stated generally that the results were good, the criticism slight and mostly, the only damning and almost most emphatic comment, the somewhat ill that could be taken, was that taken advantage, the performance showed considerable improvement and gain. The handling of the piece was a great gain, variety of means used, good close plotting, which led to death of

A Dangerous Trick.

Some persons with an extraordinary lack of common sense, when a school last evening played a loaded street game called "The Street Game" took notice of it. A little after 10 o'clock it was told over and explained by a man with a white face and many beads in his hair to believe that a revolver had been smuggled in. The police were called and the Howlaways were taken to the station where it was found that the Howlaways were not the only ones who had been taken to the station.
