CANNOT STAND LONDON.

Consuelo Duchess of Manchester cannot stand London for long at a time. Nevertheless she has for it almost a cockney fondness. The truth is she is not so young as she used to be and London tires her to such a degree that many a time of an evening when she ought to be at some big dinner party or reception, for which she has accepted an invitation, she has to lie down and telephone that she is unable to be present. As a matter of fact, she never turns out at night except when it is a royal party and the king and queen would be seriously put out were she not present. She has been out only twice this season, and never except on royal nights.

USE OF WHITE LODGE.

Last summer about this time the king gave her the use of White Lodge, this year she has taken to her own account a delightful house at Richmond. So, contrived it is that it suggests being "miles from everywhere," yet it is within half an hour's motor drive of Consuelo's own house in Grosvenor Square. It is a charming Elizabethan mansion, perched in a pine wood. The wood is very still and the whole land is full of fragrance. In one of the gardens is an oak planted by Elizabeth, and those who have stayed in the house tell of the nightingale concert which takes place there in the rose bushes in the summer time. There is a landscape garden in which are some of the finest roses of every hue under the sun, and a perfect forest of rhododendrons. Here the duchess will entertain friends for some time, and which this year starts on Friday morning and continues until the following Tuesday or Wednesday. King Edward will drink his afternoon tea with Consuelo and her friends every other Sunday at Richmond. She is the only woman outside royalty who is permitted to use red and gold liveries for her servants. On occasions when royal guests the duchess' board her four tail-coats in their crimson and gold uniforms and powdered hair and mustache, turtlenecks and put many of the guests in the shade.

IN MOST STATELY STYLE.

As befits so intimate a friend of the king's everything is carried out in the most stately manner and quite regardless of cost. Consuelo is known to her intimates as "Connie," and the king once said to her, "My dear Connie, you are the most extravagant woman I know and that's saying a lot." "Yes, your majesty," retorted the American peeress, "but own up, you wouldn't be such a friend of mine did I not realize that the first essential of successful entertaining in England is lavishness."

DANGEROUS WILD PETS.

The fashion for making pets of dangerous wild animals and reptiles, set in the first instance by the "divine Sarah," still holds its own pretty well though it lacks the approval of the king. Lord Howard de Walden has a great penchant for animals out of the ordinary run of domestic pets. He added to his collection this week a cub tiger which has been playing about the gardens of Audley End and has been "nursed" by the house's cat. The cub turned on a pet dog belonging to a lady of the party, and would have killed it had not the owner been present, so now he is to be caged. The pet leopard at Audley End knows his master very well, but is a subject of alarm to the guests. Although this beast has managed to kill various other animals who have ventured near his cage, he is still the special favorite of his master, who allows him to lick his hand.

CRUSHED BY KING.

The king does not often snub a woman, but when he does, it is a crusher. A certain well-known social leader asked him when he had been having afternoon tea with her to come and see her pythons. "Oh," he said, "I shall do nothing of the kind. When you have made a pet of a baby, a dog or even a kitten (the king does not care for cats, human or otherwise) I shall pay anyone of them a visit, but certainly not a snake. My dear lady, you have a depraved taste."

A SNAP FOR MEN.

A man who has a good address, pleasant manners (especially to women) is tolerably well informed, and has plenty to say, can, owing to the dearth of such men or indeed men in general, make a very handsome income as a professional guest. He is called a "professional guest" because he is not invited to parties, dinners or banquets. Fifty dollars is nothing of a fee for his presence at any of these parties. If he can claim aristocratic relationship he is worth an extra £50. Younger sons, homeless baronets, presentable curates, any man in need of better occupation who possesses the essential qualities, has a future before him if he will turn professional guest. By and by he will be in even greater demand for house parties where the dearth of men is felt even more acutely than in London. For such gatherings, however, he would have to be paid an exceptionally large figure, for tipping would have to be taken into consideration. As everyone knows, the tipping for even a week's visit to a smart house is ruinous to all except millionaires. The "professional guest," it goes without saying, would have to do the thing as thoroughly as anyone else or otherwise the "show" would be given away completely and that would be a fatal mistake.

good. I cannot doubt after the eloquent testimony to which I have just listened, I am profoundly grateful to you for the willingness you have shown to devote your lives to making me happy. But, alas! as I am not a Mahomedan, and, furthermore, as the laws of Spain forbid polygamy, I cannot marry all five of you. I can only marry one of you. To make choice of that one myself is a task far beyond me. With your consent I propose to have recourse to a lottery again to settle the matter. Does each one of you agree that she will accept me as a husband for better or for worse, if she draws me?"

Don Alina inscribed his name on a slip of paper and folded it up. He took four similar slips that were blank and Sir Edward Grey.

ENGLAND MAY FACE EGYPTIAN HOLY WAR.

Though it has been suspected in English government circles for some time that it has remained for Sir Edward Grey the British secretary of state for foreign affairs, to sound the warning regarding the crisis in Egypt, where it feared a religious war may burst at any moment.

In a recent speech in the house of commons Sir Edward declared that any step taken by parliament to weaken or destroy the authority of the Egyptian government would be followed by a situation out of which "there might arise the necessity for extreme measures."

Which is to say less diplomatically that if there is a revolt in Egypt a British army will be sent there.

folded them up. Then he deposited all five papers in a hat.

"Now," he said, "the one of the five best and most beautiful girls in Sodonia who draws from this hat the slip of paper on which my name is written, wins me for a husband. Once more I ask you, do you agree?"

"Yes, senator," was again the unanimous response from the five girls.

"Well," said Don Alina, "there remains only to be settled the order of the drawing. That shall be determined by the alphabetical order of the initials of your Christian names. That gives you the first chance, Encarnacion."

Encarnacion stepped forward, thrust her hand into the hat held by Don Alina, drew forth a slip of paper and unfolded it. It was blank. She did not best to look as if she did not care much, but it was poor make-believe.

"I comes next," said Don Alina, "unmoved. 'It's your turn, Lola.' Lola drew another blank and could hardly repress her tears.

"M follows 'L,'" said Don Alina. "Now, Manuela, try your luck."

Luck declared for Manuela. She drew the slip of paper on which Don Alina had written his name. All present congratulated Manuela and felicitated the bridegroom-elect who had so expeditiously and adroitly solved such an embarrassing matrimonial problem. But somehow, Manuela did not seem so ecstatically happy as the prospect of abandoning the life of a laundry girl for the luxury of a palace warranted. Don Alina did not appear to notice it, however.

"I ask you all to be my guests at lunch," he said, "and while that is being prepared, I will show you over my house."

While they were passing through Don Alina's stable in which there were three carriages and two automobiles, Manuela drew him aside.

"I have a confession to make, senator," she said. "I like you very much, but as your wife I fear I should never make you as happy as you deserve. Notwithstanding all that my parents told me I assure you my disposition is not suited to the domestic life. I like too much to be on the go. Will you not give me one of your automobiles instead of marrying me?" Rosita will make you a far better wife than I should and I am sure she will gladly marry you."

READILY AGREED.
The accommodating Don Alina readily agreed. It was a matter of indifference to him which of the five girls he married. He had treated matrimony as a lottery and was willing to take his chances. Rosita gladly consented to take Manuela's place as his affianced bride. Two weeks later they were married and after a honeymoon tour through Italy they returned to Don Alina's palace, where, according to their friends, the couple are perfectly happy.

As for the pretty and noble Manuela, she has certainly made a sensation in Seville. She uses her automobile to collect her customers' soiled linen and to return it to them when washed. It is driven by one of her brothers, who is a mechanic. Her friends, however, say that her expenditure for petrol and repairs has already made quite a hole in her $1,000, and the reckless delight she takes in the "giddy velocities" to use the quaint English of a Spanish friend—may at any time necessitate the expenditure of what remains of it for arnica, liniment, anti-septic bandages and the services of a physician.

Pittsburg—The Scandal City.

Domestic Infelicity Has Run Rife in Home of Steel Trusts—Thaw And Others.

PITTSBURG, Pa.—Pittsburg "millionaires and their sons have been unfortunate in their marriages. And they can scarcely make Adam's excuse and say, "The woman Thou gavest me, oh Lord," for in most cases it has been the wife who has suffered wrong at the hands of the husband or at least the evidence in the divorce courts seems to have borne out this theory.

One of the earlier Thaws (his name has been forgotten just for the moment) started the list. That was the famous "Indian Princess" trial. Glorious old "Tom" Marshall, Allegheny county's most famous criminal lawyer, made his reputation out of that case.

Cuba U. Quiet was the Indian princess. She married Thaw. At least the world recognized them as married, and the man never made any denial of it. She knew little of her husband or his antecedents. When he died she was advised to sue for her husband's dower of his rich estate. Only the older people of the nation remember that trial today, but it was one of the most remarkable ever tried here. The Thaws won, although the popular verdict was in favor of the dusky Indian girl who had pledged her life and honor to the scion of the nation's greatest steel trust.

Pittsburg today to recall that famous trial is an alley named for the Indian princess.

There is a rich scandal while it lasted. Buried somewhere under the dust of two generations in the Allegheny county courthouse are the records of the famous "Cuba U. Quiet" claims. To his dying day "Tom" Marshall maintained the Indian woman had been wronged because of her color.

There is a legend that when denied even the honor of wifehood the Indian woman pronounced a curse on the name of Thaw. Whether she did or not the family has certainly suffered from its share of the tragedies and scandals.

Old William Thaw, founder of the family, never went through the divorce courts, but he had his own troubles. He is known only as a Christian gentleman, philanthropist and business man of remarkable ability. The fact that his wife did not live with him for years because of his fondness for the society of other women, particularly young girls, is not exploited so much as his good deeds.

Of course, the cases of William Ellis Corey, president of the United States Steel corporation; Harry Kendall Thaw and Augustus Hartz, the millionaire paper manufacturer of this city, are just now crowding the newspapers.

They are each sensational enough in their way. Corey, lifted from comparative poverty as clerk in a coal office at $40 a month to a position where he presides over the business of a billion dollar corporation, lost his head over a chorus girl. The wife he married when she was a house servant for his father would not do for his exalted station. He wanted to be rid of her and the divorce suit recently filed in Nevada is the result.

James G. Blaine, Jr., was a Pittsburger. His father was born and reared a few miles outside of the city and he met and married his first wife here. She was Miss Marie Nevin of this city. She was a pretty actress with a brilliant career ahead of her. She probably thought an alliance with the son of the first statesman of the day would bring laurels to her she could reach in no other way. It brought heartaches.

and she sued him for divorce. She married Dr. Bull, a famous surgeon of New York. Young Blaine entered the matrimonial market again and wedded Miss Martha Hitchcock, daughter of Secretary of the Interior, Hitchcock. She is now suing him for divorce. Blaine was the home of the Blaines by adoption.

Lawrence C. Phipps, nephew of Henry Phipps, partner of Andrew Carnegie, Secretary of the Interior, Hitchcock. She is now suing him for divorce. Blaine was the home of the Blaines by adoption.

Hart McKee son of the millionaire glass man and traction magnate, married Lida Sutton. She stood it as long as she could and sued for divorce on the grounds of gross cruelty, negligence and non-support. He settled that by paying her $50,000 and not contesting the divorce. A messenger waited here the day the decision was handed down, and the instant it was over he started with a transcript for New York. Arriving there he placed the transcript in Hart McKee's hands at 7 o'clock the next morning. That afternoon a license was granted McKee to wed the beautiful Denver widow, Mrs. Tevis. They were married and started at once for Europe, sailing that afternoon. They have not disturbed the serene pool of Pittsburg society since.

James King Clark and his "violin bride" are known wherever divorce proceedings are read. He was the son and heir of the ironmaster, Charles Clark. He married Miss Edith Bartlett, and the honeymoon never ended, for the divorce suit began too soon. Mrs. Clark testified in the trial of her divorce case that her husband became repugnant to her the first time she saw him taking off his shoes, and she sat down on the floor to perform that operation. Clark sued for divorce and the jury disagreed. Then the bride tried it and she won. She is married again and is living happily.

Charles Clark, alias "Chic," cousin of the above named, married a girl from Atlanta, Ga. She was certainly worthy of a better man. They came upon hard times. The Clark estate was tied up by the will-battles. The young man, who had never tried to work, even when he attempted to become a newspaper man, was helpless to support a wife. But the girl stood the test. They had one room over in Allegheny. She cooked their meals in a chafin dish, and if ever a woman stood by a man she stood by him. The clouds rolled away. The legal entanglements were untangled. The Clark fortune went to fat, chubby "Chic," and he was again rolling in wealth. But he immediately forgot the woman who had helped him over the rough places. She sued for divorce, finally, and got it. The next day she was married to a son of Charles Donnelly, another of Pittsburg's millionaires.

enjoy the odd situation Mrs. Vanderbilt exclaimed as the engine started: "Oh, I'll have to ride on that. I have ridden on everything with wheels on it but a fire engine." As she spoke she jumped up on the back step and rode along with the smoke and steam blowing over her pink gown and picturesque hat, laughing merrily at the cheering crowd that surrounded the engine as the horses pranced at canter gait across Deerpale.
