From trees grown on the broad acres which formerly benged to the estate some of the ships of Perry's squadron were built.

HOUSE IN WHICH PLAN OF WASHINGTON WAS MADE.

The old fashioned and unassuming structure shown in the cut is the oldest house in Georgetown and lays claim to the further distinction of once having been the office of Major Pierre Charles L'Enfant, who was appointed by Washington chief engineer to draw up the plans for the new city which was to bear the president's name. In this house was executed the original design for the nation's capital city. Washington made frequent trips from Mount Vernon to consult with the clever Frenchman. The trascible L'Enfant was so difficult to manage that in the course of time it became necessary to dismiss him. Andrew Ellicott was appointed in his place.
