The late developments in summer evening wraps are chiefly in satin or broadcloth of a delicate shade of tan, rose, blue or green. Some of them have the shawl back with wing sleeves, whose lower inside edges fasten with huge ornate buttons to the underarm seams of the garment. In others the sleeves, also cut in one with the main portion, are scarcely discernible, as they are merely looped up toward the shoulder with bands of Oriental embroidery similar to that finishing the neck of the garment. All of the summer evening wraps are practically untrimmed, and many are finished with cut edges rather than narrow tailored and prominently attached hems.
