

HOW DID SOTTEN MEET HIS DEATH

N., Testified That Wound Could Have Been Self Inflicted.

Couldn't Remember What Everybody
Said—Thinks He Said to Let Adams Knock Sutton's Head Off.

ward S. Willing, resumed the stand today, Lieut. Willing is said to be related to the Astors of New York.

Maj. Leonard, the judge advocate, issued an order not to allow any witness who had testified within 100 feet of the auditorium door, where the court is sitting.

In answer to the request of the Judge-advocate counsel for the Sumners announced that they had one witness outside of those already subpoenaed by the government, whom they would like to call. He is Charles Kennedy, a private in the marine corps at Norfolk, Va.

Mr. Davis read from the records of the former inquiry, bringing out some discrepancies in Lieut. Villines' testimony. The witness said his present testimony was correct. "The former testimony was given on the same day of the shooting and said that reckless," was the least of his explanation. Willing was sometimes defiant and answered the lawyer's questions in an indifferent manner at other times. "I can't remember what ever body said," he declared, "No one could." Mr. Davis handed a rusty caliber revolver to the witness and asked him if he could identify it. The one he picked up on the edge of the parade grounds the night Sutt was shot, as he testified.

Willing took the revolver, looked at it over carefully and said it might the same one, as the gallies were near, said: "The members of the board are here." The members of the board were examined the revolver. Mr. Blount, Lieut. Willing and the conclusion, Commander Hood showed the witness the rules in the navy. Willing's duties as officer of the day at the time of the shooting and asked him if he had ever seen anyone who had threatened anyone who was unruly. Lieut. Willing said he did not recall whether or not anyone was unruly. Did you see any one of the officers to let Adams ahead and knock Sutton's head off?" asked. "I think I made such a remark," Lieut. Willing answered.

SURGEON GENERAL PICKERELL

Surgeon George Pickerell, U. S. N., who was in charge of the ship, said only one man was in charge of the ship, when testified. Dr. Pickerell heard the shots and hurried to the sick bay, examined Sutton and saw the determination of the man to die. He would in his head after death. "He would enter," Sutton said. This might a disputed point as other persons have testified that the wound was just behind the ear. Dr. Pickelback declared the shot was fired within ten feet of Sutton, and that in his opinion could have been caused by the shot. Surgeon P. J. McCrell said that he treated Lieutenants Adams, Osterman, Roelke and Potts at the hospital shortly after the shooting. They all had insignificant injuries and he thought they were all very much recovered. Surgeon P. J. McCrell and talked about the shooting with Lieutenants Adams and Osterman, as he called it, told him about the shooting and Sutton had shot the witness.

At Mr. Doyen's request the surgeon illustrated with the revolver the manner in which he believed Sutton must have shot himself.

COLONEL DOYEN.

Charles A. Doyen, senior officer of the marine corps at Annapolis at the time of the Sutor affair, and who holds the post, was the next witness called.

Col. Doyen told of Elliott's proclaiming him that he had him Sutton and killed Roelker and himself. When Col. Doyen recalled the scene he said he picked up Sutton's right hand which was exposed in front of him and he pulled and ordered one of the nearly to hurry and get him a physician. McCort Sutton was dead before they could
him. The hospital the colonel Col. Doyen described the shooting and had been reported to the young officers were in the first that the officers had special on that night on account of the but were supposed to be in camp o'clock.
