

The near approach of Conference is causing the usual stir throughout the city, numerous households beginning to prepare for entertaining the visitors who in early April turn their faces to the capital, as the eastern pilgrims find the well worn paths to Mecca. A week myriads of the city's homes are filled with the cheerful faces of guests enjoying their semi-annual pilgrimage, alert to all the intimacies of opportunity for spiritual reviving and the change and excitement incidental to the brief visit to the city, with its interest of religious gathering of great throngs, renewal of old associations, and chances of pleasure. Some of the public entertainments being prepared for their pleasure are the big Faust concert at the Tabernacle with our popular Elston in the program, the opera of Faustina and numerous other smaller affairs, which promise to keep the visitors well supplied with amusements during their stay. With these will be the usual numerous private parties given in honor of guests sojourning at the homes of residents.

An event of interest to Salt Lake was the marriage in Washington on last Wednesday of Mr. Charles A. Walker of this city, and Miss Lella Sherrard, niece of Senator W. M. Stewart of Nevada, the ceremony being performed at the latter's residence. The event, while something of the nature of a surprise to Mr. Walker's relatives at present, was not totally unexpected, as the young people had met some time ago in San Francisco and it was understood that the marriage would take place in a short time. Mr. Walker is a son of the late J. H. Walker, and has many friends here. The bride has never been in Salt Lake, but she is declared to be a charming young lady, and her coming will be greeted with interest.

PARLOR AND DINING ROOM IN RESIDENCE OF E. V. McCUNE.

The home of E. V. McCune on the corner of First and B streets is one of the prettiest of the new residences erected in Salt Lake. The wide tiled porch outside leads into a handsome hall done in rich oak, and with winding stair, mantel and fireplace and grill arches combining in a most charming effect. On the landing at the foot of the stair is an alcove, lighted with pretty arched window, and which has been converted into a cozy reading nook, with bookcases with glass doors set into the walls, and easy chairs placed conveniently in the nook. Lining the outside of the staircase is a carved bench seat, and under the stair at the rear are lavatory and cloak hooks. At the end of the hall just outside the grill arch is a handsome mantel done in carved oak with chandeliers of graceful design at each side. The fireplace is tiled with rough-faced brick in terra cotta red. On the east front is the parlor, also done in oak, and with tapestries and rug of pale green. The elaborately designed arch is effectively draped with hangings of pale green plush. The arched doors on the north open into the dining room—a spacious and exceedingly handsome apartment, its most attractive features being a long and crescent-shaped window and seat which takes up nearly all one side of the room, and an elaborately carved sideboard which fills the north end of the room. The walls are covered with Lincolnton Walton, and the polished floor with a rich crimson rug. Perhaps the most striking room in the house is the billiard room in the basement. The dimensions are about 29x25 feet and its walls are lined with a high wainscoting of mahogany. The centerpiece is an extremely elegant billiard table of English make, the only one of the kind in the city. At the farther end of the room is a fireplace built of red brick, and reaching to the ceiling, and at the opposite end of the room is one of the prettiest cosy corners in the city. It is a deep window alcove, and the arched window which crowns it is draped with pale green in cross bar design that gives a pretty lattice effect, and a couch with oriental drapings and strewn with cushions gives an exceedingly charming effect. On the east is another long, arched window, and in the corner under this stands a handsome Davenport lounge, its oriental upholstery adding effectively to the picturesqueness of the room. Over the billiard table is a chandelier in oak horn design with huge bell-shaped shades covering the electric globes hung on each of the antlers. The brackets around the room are also in oak horn design. On the floor is an oriental rug, and with the oriental paper covering the walls, complete the striking effect. The rooms up stairs are no less beautiful. They are done separately in curly birch and bird's-eye maple, the walls covered with handsome art paper in combinations of pale green and pink, dark red and blue, and with furnishings in keeping with the general fine taste. The bathroom is perhaps the handsomest in the city. It is done entirely in white, with tiled floor and walls, and with bath and elaborate shower apparatus, and sits bath in finest porcelain. A handsome nook is the dressing room which opens from Mrs. McCune's sleeping apartment on the south. It is walled and done entirely in bird's-eye maple, with clothes-closets lining one side of the room, its equipment being as convenient, and its woodwork as exquisite as can be imagined. The kitchen, pantries, etc., are on the ground or first floor, and are fitted with every modern convenience.

The scene of a very delightful event, a farewell party given in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Ray Decker and Roy Decker, who departed Sunday night for their future home at Alberta, Canada. The party was given under the auspices of the Young Ladies' M. I. A. and the Fifth ward Sunday school, of which organizations Mrs. Decker, nee Milla Stevens, and her husband were active workers. At 7:30 in the evening invited guests commenced to arrive, and before nine o'clock the spacious double parlors and the dining room were crowded with friends of the young people. The evening was spent very delightfully in playing games of various kinds, and pleasant conversation. The gathering was also favored with some sweet vocal and instrumental music, furnished by Misses Zella Stevens, Rachel Farby and Genevieve Douglas. At about midnight small lunch tables were placed in the various parts of the room and spread with delicious refreshments, of which the guests partook.

The merry crowd departed shortly after midnight, wishing Milla, Ray and Roy a pleasant journey to their destination, and much success in their new home. Those present were Bishop John Watson, H. H.
