The Times, in an editorial, thus summarizes its dispatch: Ex-Judge Morton, once special agent of the Poetoffice Department, and Conkling's emissary to the Virginia republican convention in 1876, appears to have been the engineer of the Tilden mine in Florida. Mor-ton helped William C. Chandler to supervise the count of the electoral vote in Florida, but Morton was ousted from his place by an un-grateful administration and Conkling professed to have influence enough to find him another. So, being without money or friends, and despairing of being able to earn an honess living, Morton fell into the hands of Tilden and David aided by ex-secretary of State, Mo-Lin, who had also suffered from political ingratitude. Between them they have got out a con-fession, whose worthlessness as evidence, is apparent, as its absolute
