

Keeping Our Navy Up to Date.

Biggest Warships May Not Be the Best—Our Fighting Fleet Measures Up To Highest Standards of Efficiency—Newest Improvements In Design and Equipment.

(Special to the "News.")
NEW YORK, Sept. 15.—United States naval officers do not admit that the monster battleships planned by Great Britain and Italy are necessarily more effective than warships of the Connecticut, Louisiana and Michigan-South Carolina types. Now that fuller details have reached here regarding the Cuniberti battleship, with which Italy expects to outclass the Dreadnought, there is less disposition than ever to over-estimate the importance of Italy's move. "On paper," a naval constructor attached to the Brooklyn Yard said, "both Great Britain and Italy will have ships greatly superior to anything in our navy. But all comparisons which take into consideration merely comparative displacement and battery strength are misleading. No one knows as yet how these monster warships will behave at sea. The Dreadnought, went into commission only two weeks ago, and has never had a trial of any kind. And their effectiveness in action is in even greater doubt.

Moreover, the assumption that the biggest battleship can whip one of a few hundred tons smaller, leaves out of account the matter of seamanship, brains, courage, marksmanship, and relative efficiency. American warships may not be as big as the latest, but in personnel and equipment they equal anything afloat."

This officer called attention to the employment of the 12-inch guns on the Connecticut, which has been so planned that they have a range of fire from dead ahead to a point well abeam. Another device that adds vastly to the safety of American warships is the arrangement for closing all the bulkhead doors in time of danger. From an emergency station on the bridge or in the pilot house all the doors below the water line can be closed almost instantly by what is known as the "Long Arm" system. Each door and the armor hatch have an electric motor, connected with the central station. In any emergency the ship can be rendered practically unsinkable in a few minutes by starting these motors and making the water-tight compartments so many life preservers. That it is no imaginary danger against which naval constructors are guarding our warships by perfecting their bulkhead arrangements in this way, is shown by a long line of marine disasters, beginning with the loss of the Victoria and coming down to the Russo-Japanese war.

Other powers are deeply interested in the "Long Arm" system, but for the present United States fighting ships alone have the advantage of the most effective means of safety devised since the watertight bulkhead was introduced.

Our newest warships also have a steaming radius of 5,000 miles, much greater than that of any other battleships afloat. This is a very important element in the fighting efficiency of all war vessels, and one in which the large English and Italian battleships are likely to fail. Improved steering gear, better provision for handling our naval means of communication far in advance of anything heretofore perfected are additional advantages claimed for Uncle Sam's latest warships. On the Connecticut and Louisiana a complete telephone system is installed. In addition, private lines are run for the executive officer, navigator, chief engineer, surgeon, and electrical runner. There are 25 extensions from the central station and seven private lines, in addition to 37 lines of voice pipes.

For being practical and for thoroughness—our course in steno-graphy cannot be equaled in Utah. Steno-graphic Bureau, 224 Dooly Block. Both phones. Write or call for catalogue.
