OUR FOUR HUNDRED.

There is a Four Hundred and a Four Hundred. One is well-nigh useless to this world, the other promises to be very useful to it part and all. One is located in New York City, the other is in Salt Lake City. This former is a fashionable set; we as instances, habits and associations are mostly superficial, including a tinge in wealth, day and night of society to real life as possible. It drives all dances well, affects foreign customs, reads light literature, dresses gayly, goes further than across a room, eats salami and marmalades, holds, drinks imported wines, and would rather be shot at by a vulgar bullet than do even with a necklace, a glove or other adjusted attire that does not in all respects strictly match what it is, color, cut and texture. All things worn, all things said and all things done must be "correct form." In a word they wear a class, viewed from the rude scenes of the Rockies, so many humanities butterflies. There are doubtless exceptions, but the grand object of the grand master of the set is to see that none are numerous and to weed them out wherever and whenever he thinks fit.

Our Four Hundred is different. It is apathetic. There is but a name on the list that is not that of a member, and so far from being ashamed of, or offering any excuse for it, is ignorant and unenlightened enough to be proud of it. He only works for himself and those who depend upon him, but is so reckless and vulgar as to throw in an occasional effort for the whole community. This he also does without the slightest compunction. He is, however, an obvious and upholder of good form—not the kind the other people practice, but the kind that tears out the wrinkles in the social fabric and brings men together for their prosperity and advancement; the kind that requires beneficence in the theater of populous manliness and the lighting of great batteries applied to means of transportation and communication that bears in the dispensation of steam whistles and the palanquins of mighty mechanism a miseries whose cause is for the departed hard times; and thence in the numerous and diversified enterprises in possession and projected a means of diffusing prosperity throughout the land. That is the kind of people our Four Hundred are!

Just now the "selected" last spoken of are engaged in a course worthy of them and their best efforts. They have undertaken to give a practical beginning to a line of railway to extend into and beyond the desert. Our New York friends will doubtless enjoy this piece of Western recklessness and impudence in this way, which is not unique, as at all times we can enjoy it in our way. To them we would say: Wait and see what follows. He taught best who laughs last. We know you don't like silver only as tableware and the like and have come to look upon the idea of its unlimited use as money as a species of heretics, but no matter as to that. We whose concern it is to look out for the metal have been ahead and when Congress can be induced—as we think it can right quickly—to make it a legal tender in payment of debts, it will require all that Deep Creek, Fish Springs and every other district in the country can produce, aided by rapid transportation, to supply the demand. Even as merchandise, with a railroad to that country, millions would be added to the wealth of the Territory and Salt Lake City would get the big share of it, as it ought to if it builds or shall be the cause of building said road. We are going to grow, but how, perhaps we may never be able to have a Ward McAllister to lead our "choice people," but will try to wory along through the maturities some way. I may be that our people some day will be able to choose that their roads will pay their bills and effect such exchanges as their requires, and then New York with its Wall street, its "ententes" and its corruption can turn the blinds upon some other section.

TAKE CARE OF YOUR HEALTH.

Winter is sure to relax its hold upon the northern temperate zones some time this year, and when it does we shall probably be ushered into summer weather without the intervention of a spring season at all. When that time—which cannot now be more longer delayed—comes around, there is sure to be some ill effects every where, no doubt, perhaps because of the sudden change of temperature as through the human body. I mean to change their diet and other habits as suddenly as possible. The more rapid we may be forced into our new routine, the better will we have to do with results.

An unexpected sanitary return, say the next few weeks, holds that truant terrible, intelligently selected and property used, might take the place of less harmless and much more expensive druge. Under the category of laxatives, I find the Indian senna, plums, figs, tamarisks and mulberries. Pungentated, cranberries, gooseberries and quinces are set down as astrigents (blackberry jelly having proved a salve for the cure of dysentery, to make where even indomitable faith) grapes skins extract and cactus figs ("probably pearl") are diarrhea, lemon, lime and white currents are refrigerant apples, unpeeled sandwiches and lemons the causes caused by tobacco smoke. A kind of blue ergot, resembling rice, comes in salted for the cure of dysentery. The patient is set on a low diet of bread and skin milk, sometimes raw water, but unless dry is permitted to turn himself loose upon a large wine yard, and eat away to the limit of physical capacity. The remedial and preventive narrative effect of the treatment purifies the blood, and markedly reduces the vigor of a diastema.

God is abundantly blessed in the mother of fruits of all kinds excepting those which grow only in a tropical or nearly so moist climate, and one even proves some of these, though goes to waste in embryo every year to supply another community quite large, and much more than would be the case if as much of them were eaten in season as ought to be. It is an outrage upon the system to eat more than three times a day in warm weather, indeed, except to a few who by reason of their occupations or through some special weakness are compelled to do so. It is not right to eat it either than once a day and even that more might be dispensed with than not; while the system can certainly tolerate the much of some kinds of fruits, such as apples and fresh grapes. They are among a necessity and a luxury, an article of pleasure and a medicine. Eat more fruit and few meat and see if this season will not be more agreeable to you.

THE JUDD CASE.

The News recently made mention of the case of Max Judd, who was appointed by President Cleveland as consul general to Vienna, and the probability of his receiving an ambassador from the Austrian government. The fate of a previous appointee analogous to that nation, who was passed over because his wife was a Jewess, was considered in connection with the subject, which was of course if it is not quite an interesting one.

In order, it appears, that there might be no doubt as to his being resolved, Mr. Judd has published a denial of his alleged Judaism, disclaiming that, as he is not a believer in Judaism, but is a free thinker, the Austrian objection to him is groundless. His language on the subject is explicit; and he said he abominated the synagogue merely to hear the lectures of a favorite rabbi. In this denial he is sustained by the Jewish Class of St. Louis, which says: "Mr. Judd is a Jew; no himself has declared, and for all eventual purposes we wish to record this fact."

This leads the New York Sun to remark that Mr. Judd was nominated to office without any regard whatever to his religion; and it is humiliating to our government that he attempts to placate the Austrian enemies of Judaism by alleging that he is not a believer in the Jewish religion, or to exalt the American objection to his recognition by giving any account whatever of his religious views. As well might the excellent Irish-American Catholic gentleman of Boston who has been appointed as consul-general to London undertake to do away with any Protestant prejudice that he may have against him in England on account of his religion. Mr. Judd, the Sun thinks, ought to have stood up like an American against the anti-Semites of Vienna. He is an officer of the American government. He holds his place under the authority of the American flag. No foreign power has any right to object to any accusation that we may credit to it on the ground that he is Jew or Gentile, Catholic or Protestant, infidel or pagan. We cannot listen to any such objection.

As previously stated, we believe Mr. Cleveland appointed Mr. Judd because of the latter's fitness for the place, and necessarily to afford a foreign power with which we are on good terms, but still unwilling to subscribe to its prejudices. It is time those commercial which are such in most cases without the consent of the government and which make prescriptions a part of their policy, should take some lesson in nineteenth century life from the young republic of the Western world. We surely think Austria would a sound line have gained recognition to our own because of his religion, and Mr. Judd had a fine opportunity for making him a name as the one through whom again the first lesson was learned, but he has thrown his opportunity away, withdrawn from the path in which he was born and raised, disgraced his friends and brought no credit to the government in which he was appointed—all because of the desire to hold office and secure the emoluments thereof. Perhaps Mr. Judd may be able to renew his cause with his constituents, but not with most other people's judgment. It is a rather nasty piece of business.

THE MOSCOW ASSASSINATION.

A short time ago the News contained a sketch concerning the assassination of the mayor of Moscow, Russia. It did not seem very much attention, however, to the reason that that official is not or was not well known to the American reading public, and tales of plots and counterplots resulting in or associated with murder and other crimes are as numerous from the land of the east that they are not afraid; as much attention here as they otherwise would have given to an extraordinary one. It appears that he was the son of Alexander II, who was given to pieces with a bomb by nihilists in 1880, and a half brother of the present czar, Alexander III.

A correspondent of the New York World makes this whole matter of the assassination a "romance," which he began some forty-three years ago, when the pretences of the Russian czars were controlled by the power of Nicholas. At that period the czar was the Czarow, the czar Alexander, afterward Alexander II. Though reared under a parental regime of more than ordinary severity, young Alexander managed to enjoy young and find opportunities to indulge his taste for gayety and pleasure. There had never been a czar younger than at the Russian court than that boy by four, but his earliest station carried with it penalties as well as privilages, and following many similar precedents he was eventually forced into a marriage with a German princess. The fair princess was the Tzarina, and however, good and amiable though she was, did not appeal to the ardent temperament of the subsequent layer of Princess Delphine. Through his submission with a good grace to be "sacrificed on the matrimonial altar" in the interests of his country, he had neither the inclination nor the inclination of forsaking his sexual habits, and his attachment to his wife was of the most pernicious character.

It was understood in court circles that the czar was in love with Barbara Clara Von Gattschek, widow of Walling on the czarina, and after many months she was discreetly whisked. It was once decided to send her away, of the czarists presented this, the czar's group remaining becoming more and more active. Finally Nicholas reached it, and being told he must be sent from which he sprang—a safely mixed and safe action in the master and finally sent the czarina away. She had been in her retreat very long before the czar's ruler joined her, but they were subsequently separated by an embassy of the czar and she was sent still further away with a strict injunction not to return. As a result of her unlawful alliance with the czar's wife a child was born, and in making the journey required, she died. Alexander was deeply attached to his offspring, and as soon as he had arrived at proper years appointed his daughter, Maria—the one that was recently assassinated.

The mysteries, miseries and crimes of the court of Russia would make a dark chapter in the world's history if they could be gathered together and published. Royalty and morality are not always addited to travelling in company with each other; in fact, we believe such companionship to exist only in a few cases. But certainly Mr. Peterkin has a record that might cause any other royal headquarters to shrink with shame.

AN INTERESTING DECISION.

All the cases wherein there is loss of baggage do not go against the railroads by any means, as in the case of the Haynes et al. vs. Perry et al., recently decided by the Supreme Court of the United States. It appears that one of the appellants, a member of a firm of shipping brokers of Chicago, traveled over the Western and Louis & Pacific railroad as agent of the firm, carrying a trunk containing his samples, valued at about $10,000 and enclosed as "personal baggage," neither the appellee nor the railroad agent asking any questions nor making statements regarding the contents, which was what was commonly known as a jeweler's trunk. On the way the train jumped tracks and the baggage car with its contents were burned. The firm brought suit and recovered a judgment, which was reversed by the Supreme court. Judge Blatchford, who rendered the judgment, said it was reached on the grounds that there was no evidence to show that the baggage agent had any actual knowledge of the contents of the trunk; that Perry in purchasing a ticket for a passenger train, and then tendering his trunk to the agent, to be checked, tendered it as containing his personal baggage, and that the receiver was not liable for the contents of the trunk other than "personal baggage."

THE FAIRY have all sold us about the arrival on our shores of the Duke de Verger, a lined descendant of Christopher Columbus, who will succeed President Cleveland in putting the World Fair machinery in motion; some of them have had press of the Duke, but it remains for the News to give him full title to it, which is Don Carlos del Cid de Tolosa, or is Garcia y Lopez, duke de Veragua, Marquis of Jaén, Alcaide of Andújar and Mayor of Toledo.

The Fairies with a great many who enjoy to consider them very highly honored in being permitted to pass at the gate, is that they think the whole land is going to destruction unless they are given charge of the reader.

THE FAIRIES' advice to hold all distilling water as a preventive against cholera is not difficult to follow; the interesting part will come when they take upon the necessity of also holding on the law.

EX-PRESIDENT BENHARDT visited the law of Maryland by shooting a hand out of season, and got a slight bite at the limb recently went back-biting on Sunday.

CONFERENCE visitors, going to save that money, are invited to call at the Bank of America. The popularity of this institution is attested by the fact that its deposits are shown by official statements to be published to be the largest of all the banks in Utah. Last year alone $119,000,000.00 savings deposits were opened, the recent greater than that of all other Savings Banks in Utah combined. Economy is a virtue. After increasing economy you will find your money.
