Alanson Eldredge Advertises for a Lost Heifer--D. Sabin Commences Manufacture of Iron Nails--Hay Wanted on Subscription--Governor Young Raises Some Fine Apples--Four Feet of Snow--Other Items.

From the Deseret News Files of October and November, 1857.

Warm Springs, a light red 3 year old heifer, three white feet, white under the body, tall half white, white diamond in the forehead. Believe she was driven south. Reward for any person who will give information--Alanson Eldredge.

D. Sabin has now in operation machinery for making to order all kinds of nails. He will exchange nails for wheat, potatoes, corn or produce. Encourage home manufacture!

We must have some good hay at this office immediately. Must our wants forever go unneeded?

Notice--The subscription will fill boxes of apples at $1 per head at the residence of Wm. Burgess, Thirteenth ward, near the church store.

The company from Carson began to arrive on the 1st inst., and will probably be all in by the 3rd.

This company from Carson, with a few exceptions, embraces all who were sent on missions in that region, also several from Oregon and Washington. It is reported that the Gentiles were mad when the Mormons settled there, and madder still when they left.

The finest apple we have seen in the

The Texas papers abound with statements of Indian outrages. The Indians appeared in the vicinity of San Antonio, and Captain Whittington of the Second cavalry recaptured all the mules and horses taken from the San Diego mail train.

Elder Nicholas Grossbeck and George Knowlton arrived from the States on the 7th inst. They brought with them several papers and letters, which contain nothing of importance besides the candid and truthful admission that their social system "is rotten to the core."

Snow, on the 4th inst., was four feet deep at the upper sawmill on Big Cottonwood creek.

Banks are reported to have broken in the States to the amount of $30,000,000 from the latter part of August to the middle of September.

The California mail arrived, but brought no news, as usual, except a splendid reply to President Buchanan's letter to the Memorialists of Connecticut, which we shall print at an early date.

All persons who furnished horses, mules and wagons to the Y. X. company are requested to appear at the church cemetery at once and get their property, so the affairs of the company may be closed up.

Grove of Kitz, it is thickly wooded, and has a temple and several monuments dedicated to his memory. Here sacrifices continue to be offered to his spirit. The spot is kept so sacred by both Koreans and Chinese that during the China-Japanese war in 1894 the defeat of the former is said to have been due to the fact that they allowed no trees to be felled on this ground, thus allowing the Japanese to effect an entrance unperceived--Helen Struce Messer in Harper's Weekly.

HIDDEN TELEGRAMS.

In this game you are to imagine you have a distant friend with whom you have an understanding about an expected message. It might be that there are two or three contestants for a certain prize of honor. The name of one might be Jenkins, that of another Harrison, and that of a third Sheldon. Suppose Jenkins is the successful contestant, and that you wish to telegraph your friend simply the name of Jenkins. However, you wish to conceal the message as much as possible, so the understanding is that the first letters of the word you telegraph will spell the name.

With this explanation, each player sets to work to write a clever sentence in which the first letters will spell Jenkins. The various players may get sentences like these:

Judge Engles never knew I noticed Sally.

Jack's elbow next knocked Irish Nora silly.

Jack expects to kiss in Nova Scotia. Jam eating nearly killed Ikev Natham Saturday.

It is impossible that there will be any two alike, and the game is to see who can write the cleverest.

The telegrams are read aloud, and the players vote to see who is best--Unidentified.

WOMEN COOKS PREFERRED.

Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish is not the only woman of fashion who employs a woman cook, but she is one of the best. Other families are aware women can cook as well as men. Mrs. Herman Oelrichs has an extremely stout German woman who prepares the roast and vegetables. Mrs. William T. Bull has had a woman cook ever since her second marriage, and Mrs. William B. Travers, whose little dinners are noted for their goodness, does her own cooking with a Frenchman--New York Press.

IRON AND COAL SUPPLIES.

Public attention has often been drawn to the alarming rate at which the coal supplies of the world, and especially of Great Britain, are being exhausted. It is not so generally realized that iron ore deposits are disappearing at an equally if not even more rapid rate. The leading manufacturing nations of Europe have used up their best ore bodies and are casting about for foreign sources of supply. This state of things exists also in the United States. Not long ago Pennsylvania and the eastern portion of the state of New York furnished a great part of the ore used in the States. These deposits are practically worked out. For a number of years the immense beds on the southern shore of Lake Erie, Superior, have been worked, the output being remarkably rich in the percentage of metal; yet such is the rate of exhaustion that, according to recent computations, the vast quantities of ore which have been worked are concerned, will not last more than 40 or 50 years. It has been reckoned that there are 1,000,000,000 tons of high quality, over 25,000,000 tons of medium quality, and so that after 40 years what is left will be at depths which will greatly increase the cost of production. In the northern states of the Union manufacturers already foresee the time when they may have to rely on the iron ores of the Dominion of Canada--London Telegraph.

FLOGGING AN ARCHBISHOP.

An amusing reminiscence of a flogging that the Rev. Canon Bury, rector of St. Dunstons, England, once gave the archbishop of Canterbury was recalled here in New York the other day by a relative of the rector. The latter was at one time a schoolmate of the archbishop. Randall Davidson was one of the pupils of his (Canon Bury's) father, and he could not recall that the future archbishop was remarkable for anything, except his inordinate impudence. Though himself conspicuous for his exceptional forbearance, on one occasion young Davidson provoked him beyond all patience, and he therefore turned on him and gave him a very severe thrashing. The future archbishop did not take it "lying down." On the contrary, he at once complained, and so got him into trouble, and, not content with that, he complained to his own parents and got Canon Bury's father into trouble. Thus it was that their mutual reminiscences were not altogether pleasing. But Canon Bury firmly believed--if he was profoundly convinced--that the thrashing did the archbishop a power of good. It was the foundation of character, and he afterward displayed tact and caution, and reverence for his superiors which has led in a great measure to his elevation to the primacy--New York Commercial.

BEATEN AT THE START.

Tod Sloan had been halted in Connecticut by the Bridgeport police for speeding his 40-horsepower French automobile at a rate legally high. The young man explained that he was trying to break the record between New York and Boston, and he paid his fine good-humoredly from a roll of bills so thick that he could hardly get it out of his pocket.

BEAUTIFUL SWISS TO WED GLADSTONE DOWIE.

Miss Ruth Hofer, who, it is announced, will bestow her hand and heart on A. Gladstone Dowie, son of Elijah III., is said to be the richest subject of the little European republic. Her entire fortune will go into the coffers of Elijah III., a large part of it having been turned over to him already.

NAPOLEON, As Seen by His Associates DRESSED AFTER FASHIONS OF HIS OWN

THROUGH you know the exact number of shirts Napoleon wore" was the greeting extended to Frederic Masson, the Napoleonologist authority, at the time of his installation as one of the "40 immortals" of the French academy. Napoleon's valet de chambre, Constant, goes a peg higher in his personal recollections and lays bare the secrets of his master's "get up" from undershirt to overcoat, and that for all occasions, whether the workroom or drawing room, the council chamber or the battlefield.

"The only requirements the emperor made as to his clothing," says Constant, logs he rubbed it with the heel of his shoe or the boot on the other leg, which added still more to the effect of the ink blotches. His shoe buckles were oval, either plain gold or with medallions.

"His majesty before making his toilet in summer put on pantaloons of white pique and a dressing gown of the same and in winter pantaloons and dressing gown of swanskin, while on his head was a turban tied in front, the two ends hanging down on his neck behind. When the emperor donned this headpiece his appearance was far from elegant. When he came out of the bath we gave him another turban, for the one he wore was always wet in the bath, where he turned and splashed himself incessantly. Having taken his bath and read his dispatches, he believed he rubbed it with the heel of his shoe or the boot on the other leg, which added still more to the effect of the ink blotches. His shoe buckles were oval, either plain gold or with medallions.

stant, "were that it should be of fine quality and perfectly comfortable, and his coats for ordinary use, dress coats and even the famous gray overcoat were made of the finest cloth from Louviers. Under the consulate he wore, as was then the fashion, the skirts of his coat extremely long. Afterward fashion changed, and they were worn shorter, but the emperor held with singular tenacity to the length of his, and I had much trouble in inducing him to abandon this fashion, and it was only by a subterfuge that I at last succeeded. Each time I ordered a new coat for his majesty I directed the tailor to shorten the skirts by an inch at least, until at last, without his being aware of it, they were no longer ridiculous. He did not abandon his old habits any more readily on this point than on all others, and his greatest desire was that his clothes should not be too tight, in consequence of which there were times when he did not make a very elegant appearance.

"The king of Naples (Josephine Murat), the man in all France who dressed with the most care and nearly always in good taste, sometimes took the liberty of bantering the emperor slightly about his dress," said he to the emperor, your majesty dresses too much like a good family man. Pray, sire, be an example to your faithful subjects of good taste in dress. "Would you like me, in order to please you," replied the emperor, "to dress like a scented fox, like a dandy--in fine, like the king of Naples and the Two Sicilies?" As for me, I must hold on to my old habits. Yes, sire, and to your habits, too (old clothes or 'dead' fashions), added the king on one occasion. "Detestable!" cried the emperor. "That is worthy of Brunet." And they laughed heartily over this play on words.

"The emperor's vest and breeches were always of white cassimere. He changed them every morning, and they were washed only three or four times. Two hours after he had left his room it often happened that his breeches were all stained with ink, owing to his habit of wiping his pen on them and scattering ink all around him by knocking his pen against the table. Nevertheless, as he dressed in the morning for the whole day, he did not change his clothes on that account and remained in that condition the remainder of the day. He wore none but white silk stockings. His shoes, which were very light and thin, being lined with silk and his boots lined throughout inside with white flannel, and when he felt an itching on one of his gan his toilet, and I shaved him before he learned to shave himself.

All these preparations ended, I put on him light flannel or cassimere slippers, white silk stockings--the only kind he ever wore--and very fine linen or fustian drawers, sometimes knee breeches of white cassimere, with soft riding boots, sometimes pantaloons of the same stuff and color, with little English half boots which came to the middle of the leg and were fastened with small silver spurs which were never more than six lines in length. All his boots were finished with these spurs. I then put on his flannel vest and shirt, a neckcloth of very fine muslin and over all a black silk stock; finally a round vest of white pique and either a chasseur's or a grenadier's coat.

"The emperor wore no jewelry. He wore on his coat only a star and two crosses, that of the Legion of Honor and that of the Iron Crown. Under his uniform and on his vest he wore a red ribbon, the ends of which could just be seen. When there was a reception at the chateau or he held a review he put this grand cordon outside his coat. His hat, the shape of which was modeled after the portraits of his majesty, was extremely fine and very light, lined with silk and wadded, and on it he wore neither tassels nor plumes, but simply a narrow, flat band of silver, and a little tricolor cockade. The swords of his majesty were very plain, with gold mountings and an owl on the hilt.

"The time had been when the wardrobe and toilet of Napoleon were not so elaborate as that described by his valet. The Duchesse d'Angoulême, writing of a visit made by the budding general to her home soon after he had conquered the seignions, says: "Bonaparte had on a gray greatcoat, very plainly made, buttoned up to his chin; a round hat, which was either drawn over his forehead, so as almost to conceal his eyes, or stuck upon the back of his head, so that it appeared in danger of falling off, and a black cravat, very clumsily tied. This was Bonaparte's usual dress. At that period, indeed, nobody, either man or woman paid any great attention to elegance of appearance, and I must confess that Bonaparte's costume did not then appear so droll as it now does on recollection. He brought with him a bouquet of violets, which he presented to my mother. This piece of gallantry was so extraordinary on his part that we could not help smiling at it. He smiled, too, and said, 'I suppose I make

A constable advised Mr. Sloan against racing. He pointed out the inevitable danger of every kind of high speed contest. "You, I perceive," said the young man, "believe only in the kind of racing that my friend Peter Sandys won a small bet by." "Peter had been a jockey, but fat and old age had put him out of business. He was only 5 feet tall, but he weighed 150 pounds, and he was 63 years old. Naturally, he wasn't taken for a sprinter anywhere. "Nevertheless he offered to race me one day. "I'll race you and beat you," he said. "If you'll give me a yard start, for $5." "I take that bet," said I. "Where shall we race?" "Up a ladder," said Sandys.
