Matrimonial Advertisements.

[CONCLUDED.]

On this occasion she received me with manifestations of warmth, and explained that her affairs were so situated that, if she married within two years, the bulk of the property left her by her deceased husband would revert to his family, and hence if she married it must be kept a secret. She proposed that we should unite our fortunes by a secret marriage, and we parted with the understanding that two days after we were to settle the preliminaries and fix the time. I had my suspicions all the time that the widow was a cunning little fraud, and was personating a reputable lady; hence when we parted I "shadowed" her up Broadway to University street, to West Eighteenth street, and saw her enter a house near Sixth Avenue. As she tripped lightly up the steps I observed her give a sign to a police officer across the way. Approaching him I enquired her name and the character of the house. The officer was an acquaintance of mine, and he readily answered, with a laugh:—

"Why, is it possible you don't know Jennie Williams? She is the "friend" of the captain of our precinct. The old man's got a good thing there, isn't he? You'd better steer clear of her, as she'll pluck you as sure as fate. Did she signal you to follow?"

"I? no," I replied; "I merely thought I knew her, and was curious to find out if I was right."

Of course that ended our negotiations, and I left her and her $20,000 as the undisputed property of a married captain of police, who neglects his own family for her smiles and caresses.

CECELIA, THE BLACKMAILER.

I have but one more adventure to record in this letter. I opened an interesting correspondence with the "Southern Lady," who proved to be a petite brunette, with a profusion of raven black hair, and a face full of intelligence and desire. We met in one of the art galleries, and by request I accompanied her at three in the afternoon to the residence of a lady friend of hers in East Sixteenth street. We were shown into the parlor, and were enjoying an animated chat when the parlor door was rudely pushed open and a man stalked into our presence, with a heavy cane in his hand. We were sitting upon either ends of a sofa, when she uttered a scream and sprang to her feet in well-assumed terror. He cast a terrible glance upon us and exclaimed:

"I've caught you at last, you d——d huzzy; keeping assignations, eh? with other men, have I?"

Then turning to me, he yelled:

"G—— d—— you! what are you doing in this house with my wife? I'll knock your infernal head off, d——n you."

This was uttered as he strode around a large centre table, stick in hand, to strike me. An adventure of this kind in a city where there are so many blackmailers, I had expected and prepared myself for, and quickly drawing a little Sharp's revolver, I presented it at his head, and coolly said:

"O, I guess not; stand back; I have been in just such scrapes before. The meeting was of this woman's seeking, and I guess you can't bleed Charley Watters."

The appearance of the pistol disconcerted him, and enabled me to reach the door leading to the hall. Wheeling about, I went out backwards, luckily found the key on the outside, and locking them in the parlor, I quickly opened the front door and made my escape to the street. Taking refuge in a Second Avenue car, I saw him soon after rush down to the corner of Second Avenue and Sixteenth Street and look up and down in search of me. I subsequently ascertained that the residence was a bad house, and that the "Southern Lady" was a notorious blackmailer.

There, you have my experiences in the "matrimonial" business during two weeks. From them the reader will learn something as to the class of persons who advertise and answer matrimonials. It is a very dangerous business, and the only wonder is that respectable ladies, moving in good society, will venture to risk their reputation in any such adventures. It is lucky for "Mrs. Densmore," alias "Cousin Carrie," that she fell into the hands of so honorable a party as your correspondent, who returned her letters. Scores of these "cards" are inserted for no other purpose than to blackmail just such indiscreet women as the wife of the hotel-keeper. VIDETTE.

—Cor. St. Louis Globe.

BREVITIES.

Visionary men are continually searching after the unknowable and digging for the unget-at-able.

An impassioned swain under a bad spell wrote, "Mary, I love the well." She replied that she was glad he did not drink liquor.

Mark Twain says: "To the poor whites along the Mississippi river chills are a merciful provision of Providence, enabling them to take exercise without exertion."

"They fired two shots at him," wrote an Irish reporter, "the first shot killed him, but the second shot was not fatal."

A country youth, who desired to know how to become rich, sent a quarter in answer to an advertisement, and received the following valuable receipt: "Increase your receipts and decrease your expenditures. Work eighteen hours a day, and live on hash and oatmeal gruel."

An Irish soldier, pretending to dumbness, and the surgeon of the regiment, after several attempts to restore him, declaring him incurable, was discharged. He, in a short time afterwards, enlisted in another corps, and being recognized by an old comrade, and questioned how he learned to speak "By St. Patrick!" replied Paddy, "ten guineas would make any man spake."

Read the best books, those that contain the best expression of man and his works. Among these are the best poems and best novels. They express the most varied and best of human experience, the best English thought in talking, and in writing. Every person should have his own style, which is that in which he best says what he has to say.
