AT WASATCH.

Wasatch, July 21, 6 a. m.—The week here has been very cool and pleasant, sometimes almost cold. In the evening heavy wraps and kitchen fires are not at all uncomfortable, and both have been regularly resorted to. There have been no festivities to speak of, mainly on account of a lack of leadership in that direction. But that does not mean that there have been no enjoyable gatherings in the camp during that time, for the contrary is true. Informal calls between cottagers have been numerous; and these are considered more appropriate than any conventional function. Rest, recreation and health-building appear to be the chief objects of nearly everyone. Some mountain climbing has been indulged in, but not as much as is expected later on. The festive trout is becoming more and more aware of the raid made upon him and is gradually growing more shy though the expert fisherman does not go unwarded for his time and patience. The "News" is much sought after, both at the hotel and among the cottagers. The Saturday paper with its fine illustrations and varied assortment of well chosen articles is particularly inquired for and read.

Service berries are practically ripe and choke cherries are gradually taking on a crimson hue.

This frothy and cloudlike evening wrap for summer typifies the season's fancy for lightness and elaboration. It is a mass of chiffon pinnings and ruchings, which suggest a snow drift in the heart of August. The foundation of the cape is of white peau de sole. A deep yoke is formed of close curly ruchings of the chiffon, which give a fleecy effect, and the long pleated scarfs with their ruffled edges lend an additional charm and grace to the garment.

CLUB CHAT.

The Colonial Dames in the State of New York will concentrate their efforts this year on publishing a translation of Dutch records containing valuable historical and genealogical data from 1664 to 1670, the originals of which are in the State archives and of which year after year from handling for reference. While these records are largely genealogical, there is much of interest concerning the city, the early names of its streets, and the quaint form of city government, particularly the paternal tendencies of the city fathers, who acted even in the capacity of match-makers for the widows of men who had served in the city government. The translation of these records is completed and the Colonial Dames will have them published in handsome, substantial volumes, such as they have selected for other valuable papers throwing light on the history of early New York.

In addition to this undertaking the Colonial Dames will this year place brass tablets upon the two graystone houses built on the Hudson by Sir William Johnson, for himself and his son, Sir Guy Johnson. Three cash prizes, each to be accompanied by a medal, will also be awarded to the prospective public-school teachers, now being equipped at the Normal College, for the first year's service. The Dames will also be interested in the publication of the Dutch records and the placing of tablets upon historic buildings and sites. The Dames in New York number about 580.

The Working Girls' Vacation society provides for vacation for girls in the summer and issued 7,500 excursion tickets at half rates. The society will again undertake its beneficent work the first of June. The charge of $7 a week at the summer home has not proved sufficient to cover expenses, so the price will be slightly raised the ensuing season.

The Woman's Era Club of Boston, the chief colored women's club in the United States, was formed in October, 1892, for the purpose of mutual self help. It chose for its motto the last words of Lucy Stone, "Aim to make the world better," and being composed of the brightest and most capable colored women of Boston, it soon came into local prominence and a little later attracted almost national attention. Among its members were and are graduates of colleges and other higher institutions of learning, as well as women who have in spite of their color won recognition without the advantages of technical education.

While the club is the leading one of colored women in the United States, it is not the oldest in the country or in Boston. There is in existence in Boston today an organization of colored women which was incorporated under the laws of the Commonwealth in 1833, the first so incorporated, and known as the Female Benevolent Firm. It has a large membership and is now quite wealthy. Two other organizations in Boston, the Baptist Women's Mutual Relief society and the United Daughters of Zion, are more than fifty years old and have large memberships.

It is because the mission of the Woman's Era club was broader than that of any earlier similar organization that it has succeeded so well and become so widely and favorably known. It has also been extremely fortunate in all ways having competent administrators and advisers. The fields of usefulness into which the club has gone have been many and various. The organization was not started primarily for charity, nor yet for self-culture alone, but it soon saw opportunities to spread out into the domain of philanthropy, and was led to undertake various movements for charity, education and public morality.

Its most notable undertaking in its earlier years was the calling of a national convention of colored women in 1895 in Boston, the first of its kind ever held. It brought together many of the ablest colored women in the land, and its deliberations were such as to not only attract the widest attention, but out of the gathering grew the National Association of Colored Women. The occasion of the convention was to make an emphatic and united reply to the slanderous charges against colored women as a whole contained in a letter written by John J. Jacks of Missouri to Miss Florence Balmagne, in England. Jack's letter was such that it aroused the colored women as perhaps nothing else could have done, and since the contention called by the Woman's Era club resulted in a national association, perhaps the slander was not an unjustified one.

Another important movement was the direct outcome of this national convention. The Woman's Era club, having made such a success of it, wanted to keep the national association going and make it more powerful. The steps were taken to interest colored women in New England in the club movement, and this, too, succeeded splendidly. Clubs were formed in New Bedford, Worcester, Cambridge, Springfield and Everett in Massachusetts, in Providence and Newport, R. I., and New Haven, Norwich and Hartford, Conn., through the counsel and assistance of the Woman's Era club.

Each there was organized the New England Federation of Colored Women's club, that flourished and became a factor in the communities where its constituent members were located. In 1897 the New England federation had extended its influence over into New York State where several clubs were formed, and then the larger organization became what it now is, the Northeastern Federation of Colored Women's clubs, the ruling and guiding spirit of which is the Woman's Era club of Boston.

FEMINE FLOTSAM.

Don't Be Unattractive.

The woman who allows herself to look unattractive is either she who has no faculty of discrimination between the becoming and the unbecoming, or she who, by circumstance or influence, allows herself to drift into indifference. There is no excuse for this.

A woman who has taste, no matter how long she must wear her gowns, always looks well; she feels, and rightly so, that neither dowdiness of apparel nor of face is to be tolerated; and the face, if neglected, becomes quite as unattractive as one's clothes.

A pretty face or an expensive hat may not be attainable, but a bright expression costs nothing, and a becoming hat is cheap, says Grace Phillips in the American Queen. Do not allow disfiguring blemishes to mar the skin, either by carelessness or indifference, nor an ugly, soured expression to spoil the face. The general appearance, and though often done in its name, is the grossest extravagance.

One of the first essentials toward economy is to save strength, physical as well as mental, and another equally important is to keep looking prosperous. It is not economy to employ your own clothes if you are employed during the day; the strain of nightwork until you for the business of the morning. Give the work out. Dress suitably, simple dresses well made are best for business purposes; hats, shoes and gloves are important adjuncts of the toilet, and they should be up to the proper mark. If you allow yourself to appear unattractive, it is fatal. An attractive personal appearance counts for a great deal, and when it can be purchased at the price of a pleasant expression, appropriate, modest clothes (they need not be expensive), it surely is within the reach of all.

To Put Flesh on a Thin Neck.

If there be a general absence of flesh on the body, a very careful diet will do all that is required. As many as five meals a day may be indulged in, but they must be taken at regular hours, leaving sufficient time for digestion in between. Plenty of milk, milk-puddings, eggs, bread, cakes, sweet fruits, and all kinds of vegetables, meat well cooked, and fish should be partaken of with care of improvement are visible. The case must be taken that one does not err in the other direction and become stout. When trying to put on flesh, avoid everything acid, take plenty of warm
