Much Building Under Way and Many Plans Being Drawn For Future Construction-Other Lines,

The week past has been very fair in the local business world considering the depressing condition of the weather, and in all lines of trade there is a cheerful state of hopefulness that is encouraging. Collections will average fair. In banking, the deposits seem to be increasing, and the demand for money continues good, with an abundant supply for all legitimate needs and purposes. The rates continue the samedependent on the securities and the time of loans. Bankers say the condition of the money market in Salt Lake has been entirely satisfactory for the has been entrety anchestored y for the past few months. The bank clearings are not as large this week as last, but there is evidently less padding in the way of carrying over of unsettled balances.

RIFLES CONFISCATED.

PLAYHOUSES OF THE METROPOLIS By Acton Davies.

Special Correspondence.

New York, Feb. 6 .- Whatever the eventual result of the war which the independents are now waging against the theatrical trust one conclusion is already evident. The actor as well as the producing manager cannot fail to benefit by it. The actor's position has improved immensely already.

During the last five years the commercial methods which have been adopted by so many of the reigning managers have brought the actor to a state of downtroddenness where he scarcely dared call his soul his own. I don't mean to say that he suffered so much in the matter of salary, as a matter of fact the salary that a good matter of fact the starty that a good actor can draw today is larger than it ever was before. But at the same time as far as independence went or indi-viduality was concerned he had be-come little better than a nonentity un-less he hargened to be same ble star less he happened to be some big star, and even most of the stars were event-ually browbeaten into submission. Now the situation, thanks to the work of Messrs, Belasco, Shubert and Fiske has completely changed. The actor has an open market once more. Com-petition, which has been practically dead for the past five seasons, is once more going to make the theatrical sit-uation exceedingly interesting and to a certain extent at all events, the actor can pick and choose; there is an open market for him. When the whole theatrical power rested in the hands of a few managers who were leagued together in a common bond, the actor who chanced to offend one of these managers was not infrequently put on the blacklist. And once on their blacklist, he could whistle for em-ployment of any kind. The stars in the same case, supposing they hap-pened to be booked in a manner which did not sult them had merely to grin and make the best of it. There was and make the best of it. There was no alternative for them. But the re-cent re-inforcement of the Shuberts army of stars, by Mr. Sothern and Miss Marlowe has thrown the balance of neuron in the shuberts of power, in the matter of altractions entirely on the independents side. Not only so, but the moral effect on the other actors of this latest move of the Sothern-Marlowe combination is having a tremendous effect. Other stars who have had grievances of their own for several seasons are now airing them to the fullest extent and balm is being administered in large and almost philanthropic quantities by those managers who realize the under existing conditions. The whest move that they can make is to concede to their demands. For the actor this is unquestionably just as if should be. It will be a splendid thing for both sides of the fence. And one of its immediate effects will probably be that next season will find a great many the smaller managers going in once more for individual pro-ductions. During the last few year you couldn't blame any manager with a limited capital for thinking a very long time before he ventured to make a new production, before he was per-fectly certain that bookings for his announce that they intend to make Chi-cago their theatrical headquarters for announce that they intend to make Chi-cago their theatrical headquarters for the future I can only wish them luck and say that as far as I am concerned little old New York is still good enough for me. The only trouble I find with the metropolis now is that I have so many successes running in my theaters here that I can't make room for some of my new hits which are still on the road, to come in. That's the only trues and authentic reason why all my pro-ductions are not playing on Broadway at the present moment. The few fail-ures which I and others have scored haven't frightened me a bit more than the announcement that there is to be another all-Indian play on the boards before mine is seen on Brondway. Of course it is pretty rough on Mr. Wilson, Mr. Gillette, Mr. Crane, and those of my other stars who are now compelled to remain on tour, but they'll all have their turn in the long run, probably I'll have just as hard a time getting them to take to the road again as I am just having with Miss Adams and Miss Barrymore, neither of whom will be, able to entertain any out of town propositions for this season at least."

Not only that, but the real mother of the famous daughter is famous too, in her own right. The whole situ-ation dissolves itself into this one fact, ation dissolves itself into this one fact, that there are Bates and Bates. Ever since "The Girl of the Golden West" was produced at the Belasco theater, people have stopped me on the street cars, shaken me by the head in rali-way trains, and written me reams of most wildly enthusionic notes; all concerninging me upon the way trains, and written me reams of most wildly enthusiastic notes; all congratulating me upon the spiendid work which my daughter Blanche is doing in the new play. The climax came last night when a woman sent me a check for $8, explaining that she had tried in vain, for weeks, to get seats at the Belasco, and wouldn't I please use my personal influence with my daughter to secure 4 seats to see the play. Miss Blanche Bates and I are not related in any way. The only bond of union between us is our mutual ad-miration for each other and the fact miration for each other and the fact that we are both disciples of Mr. Belas-co. Miss Bates' mother is Mrs. F. The acquisition of more serious stars such as Mr. Sothern and Miss Marlowe, will also enable the Shuberts to go in for plays more seri-ously instead of wasting so much time and money upon inferior musical pro-ductions. Of course, a really good comic opera or musical councely will score at any time, as witness the case of "Mile, Modiste," the new Herbert Blossom opera in which Fritzi Scheff is scoring the success of her career at the Knickerbocker. But as good a sausical attraction as this only occurs once in three or four seasons. In the meantime it is futile and ridiculous for a manager to imagine that he can interest the public in such a production interest the public in such a production as let us say the Lyric's new opera "Mexicane." There is no earthly use in beating about the bush with regard to this new comic opera by Miss Clara Driscoll and Robert D. Smith. It is trite and old-fashioned. In the same class. Miss Christie Mac-Donald and Mr. Edward Martindale both by their singing and acting, stand out conspicuously from the balance of the cast. The poor comedians are completely snowed under—it is not their fault, they have no material to work on. As a Broadway attraction "Mexicana" is very much below par.

It has remained for Mr. Oscar Ham-merstein once more to introduce New York to the most original variety specialty of the year. In fact of many years. It was only last week that Mr. Arthur Prince, the young English ven-triloquist made his Metropolitan debut at Hammerstein's Victoria, but ever since his first performance the theater has been jammed to the doors, and no wonder. Mr. Prince's specialty is without an exception, the cleverest act of its kind that the stage has shown. Originally a young actor in the Eng-lish provinces. Mr. Prince one day, quite by accident, discovered that he was a ventriloquist. He developed his powers so successfully that within a very short time he gave up the theater as a profession for good, and took him-self to the variety halls, where his success was instantaneous. Early this year he started on a 23 weeks' tour of this country, at a comparatively small powers. In the west, where he first appeared his success was so great that he succeeded in trebiling his salary in-side of six weeks. He is now playing the last week of this American con-tract, and much against his will he will be obliged to return to England next week to fill a number of engagements to which he had already contractsd over there.

there. over Mr. Prince makes his first entrance in the uniform of an English naval of-ficer. He is exceedingly good looking and debonair, and enough like Mr. Harry Reeves Smith, the English actor to pass for his younger brother. The doll which he uses in his act is dressed as a British tar. He has just joined the navy, and he is as full of grievances the navy, and he is as full of grievances as the circumstances will allow. In the first place he objects to being called so early in the morning. The doll sits on the edge of a table. Mr. Prince man-ipulates its jaws with his hands in the conventional ventriloguist way while he himself lolls back on a sofa, puffing leisurely at his cigar. The conversation between the two develops into a regu-lar little play containing two distinct characterizations. The sketch lasts for nearly half an hour during which the characterizations. The sketch lasts for nearly half an hour during which the house is in roars of laughter and it finally comes to a climax when Mr. Prince continues to make the doll talk while, he himself is drinking a long giass of claret and seltzer. Apart from its marvelous cleverness as a veatrilo-quist act, this specialty would score a huge success on its comedy points alone. If Mr. Prince wrote this sketch for himself he ought to turn playwright in his leisure hours. It is a long time his leisure hours. It is a long time since any variety theater has offered so wonderful an witty a specialty.

"It amuses me to hear the whines which some of the disgruntled theatri-cal managers are putting up about the treatment New York has given some of their unsuccessful plays," remarked Manager Charles Frohman on Saturday just after his return from Atlantic City, where he had successfully launched Mr. Francis Wilson in "The Mountain Climber" on the previous night. "If it is true as some of them
