How an English Clergyman Reformed the Morals of a Community.

Moncure D. Conway, writing from London to the Cincinati Commercial, says:

There has just come to my knowledge an instance of the moral effect which may be produced by making the Sabbath attractive to the minds and tastes of the poor, which may interest some of your philanthropists. A clergyman of the Church of England, Rev. Frederick Silver, was appointed twenty-two years ago to a parish in Shropshire called Norton-in-Hales. This parish was noted for drunkenness, lawlessness and every species of vice which is harvested from general ignorance. Being a man of some means as well as of good sense, he determined to make a bold stroke to compete with the gin-shops for the interest of the roughs on Sunday. Sunday, he perceived, was the very worst day in the week, Satan always finding plenty of mischief to be done by the idle hands of the Nortonians on that day. How to deal with the matter? Some suggested prayer-meetings, and others ritualistic entertainments. But the rector conceived another idea. For many weeks there were seen going up to his door large and peculiar boxes and cases, which greatly excited the curiosity of his neighbors. Then he purchased the largest suite of rooms he could get in the town. After the curious cases had been coming in for a month or two, lo, the people of Norton-in-Hales were one morning astonished by the appearance of placards on every wall and on the trees far away in the country, announcing that Silver had made up a museum, and that it would be open to the public throughout the following Sunday afternoon. The dissenting parsons groaned; the deacons were dumb; the roughs rubbed their eyes. On Sunday they first crowded to hear the Rev. Frederick Silver preach. He modestly related how he had recognized, as he believed, the chief need of the town, and why he had resolved to collect a museum. In the afternoon they crowded to the museum. They saw there over one hundred capital paintings, among them works by Carlo Dolce, Del Piombo, Curacci, Westall, Hogarth, N. Poussin, Wouvermans, Gainsborough and Landseer. They saw a model of the Alhambra in Spain; specimens of cocoons at work, and the 136 colors silk can take; a fine model of an elephant taken from a palace in Delhi during the mutiny; cases of English coins, from William the Conqueror to Queen Victoria; antique watches and jewelry; a case of remarkable autographs of great men; a noble ornithological collection, including thirty-two fine Australian specimens, a whole room filled with the costumes, boots and shoes, nets, implements, weapons, etc., of New Zealand, Madagascar, North America, China and India. They saw Cromwell's sword. But I must not try to give you Silver's catalogue, which implied that the good man had devoted his whole means to his project, and levied contributions upon important sources. Well, this thing has gone on for over fifteen years; the result is that there is no seat in Silver's church unoccupied, but his museum has revolutionized the community in Norton-in-Hales. I saw, not long ago, a Shropshire paper which declares that the rector found that parish "so lawless that its name had obtained a notoriety, and that it is now one of the happiest communities in England." The cottages are so large and so handsome that travelers ask, "Where do the laborers live?" A school has risen, a new medical dispensary, and a library. The rector's church had to be rebuilt to hold the large crowd, and during the work he was in the habit of aiding it with his own hands. This is the way Sabbath breaking has demoralized the Nortonians, who are so infatuated that they recently held a festival in honor of their rector, whom they declared by resolutions, "the leader in every good work which could promote the intellectual and moral character of the people." If all rectors were like Silver we should hear little talk of disestablishment.

Indian Wives—A Curious Question.

It has been a common custom among the settlers in frontier States to contract what are called Indian marriages. There is scarcely a hunter or trapper in the wilds of the Great West who has not an Indian wife and a number of half-breed children. They select their wives when among the Indians and far from civilization, and wed them according to such marriage custom as may be in vogue in the tribe to which the woman belongs. The question has now been brought before the Missouri Courts whether the issues of such marriages can inherit property as legitimate heirs. This is a question of great interest in the West, as in Missouri, Arkansas, Texas, Iowa, and nearly all the Territories, there are a great number of persons who are the offspring of such irregular marriages. The case which has opened this novel question of legitimacy is one of peculiar interest. William Gilliss, one of the first settlers of Kansas City, and its most wealthy citizen at the time of his death, some time ago died a bachelor, as every one supposed, leaving his property to his niece, a Mrs. Troost, who afterwards also died, leaving bequests for the erection of an opera house, a church and a seminary, and for the establishment of a park and other public improvements in Kansas City; Mr. Gilliss, it appears, in early life, had been an Indian trader and had contracted an Indian marriage. His half-breed children have contested the will of Mrs. Troost, on the ground that they were the legal heirs of Gilliss, and the case has been tried before a jury in the Circuit Court, who decided in favor of the Indian heirs, thus setting aside the will. Of course an appeal was taken from this decision, and the case will be carried before the Supreme Court, when the question will be definitely settled whether a marriage contracted according to Indian customs constitutes such a marriage as the laws of the country can take cognizance of and enforce as legal and binding in all respects.—Territorial Enterprise.
