The will of Edward W. Murphy has been made public by a jury in Judge H. H. McLean's courtroom. Murphy was a former U. S. senator, who died in October, 1887, at the age of 85 years. His estate, valued at over $100,000, had a will executed two days before his death in September the bulk of his property to his wife, Julia Doyle, and his children. A surviving sister was given only $500, and $600 was bequeathed in the mistress of William Murphy, the attorney who drew the will. However, this is a settled case, and the time he left the will and that he was unduly influenced by the Doyle. Testimony was also taken to show that the testator was unable to hold the pen with which his name was signed, and that he did not sign the will. Murphy did not make the mark that he was not of sound mind and that the will was not executed by any person at his direction. All of the jurors concurred in the verdict except the one, who voted to sustain the will.
