Draughts from Salt Lake.

SALT LAKE, June 1, 1873.

My Dear Em:—If I am not dreaming—and I feel bravely awake—the present greeting is sent you from this Mormon city, where in the blessed providence of God we arrived Saturday night, after a journey that has been a diamond without a flaw.

* * * * * * *

The weather is celestial. As we were hurried forward, hour after hour, across the barren desert country, under a perfectly cloudless sky, I felt to complain of the ingratitude of Earth which, receiving all this of Heaven, gave no sign in springing grass or blooming flower. * * *

But I pass on at once to present a sketch of the city and people as they appear to my eyes.

The town, which might be called a city on a hill but for ranges of mountains towering above and around, is handsomely and regularly laid out in streets running according to the points of the compass, and ornamented with trees rapidly attaining to shady and grateful luxuriance. City Creek, whose presence stayed the feet of Brigham Young in his search across remote and arid plains and led him to "seat" this land unto himself and his people to all generations, comes galloping from the mountains like a messenger of glad tidings, and is retailed in brooks and rivulets refreshing to behold along the sides of the streets. The houses, principally of wood, are interspersed with flourishing gardens of fruit trees, vegetables and flowers, which impart to even the plainest an air of refinement and beauty. Stone and adobe, or sun-dried brick, are likewise extensively used for building materials; the Theatre, City Hall, Museum, and the new Episcopal School Building being elegant specimens, and a brilliant sequel, it must be said to the story of poverty and privations which scores of the inhabitants still in their prime relate to you from their own experience.

Our hotel is the famed Townsend House, * * * large and long upon the ground and only two stories in height, with wide piazza along the whole front. The robbin's song in the shade trees this morning was a veritable love letter from our dear New England. The house well sustains its reputation in every respect. All its attaches—whether Mormon or Gentile—I cannot say—show the guests the perfection of polite attendance. * * *

Let any female who wishes to study the fashions of all nations come to Salt Lake and attend the Tabernacle. Never did I see anything half so heterogeneous. It is not to be supposed that this is the result of anything but the exigences of the system; but it struck me that nothing else could proclaim so loudly that this people have come out of every nation, kindred and tribe. * * From all classes, I am sure, there was sincere and devout worship. * * *

Could a finer landscape, displayed in a more glorious light than that which met our gaze on coming out of the Tabernacle at the close of the morning service, ever have dwelt in the imagination of even the Divine Artist? The wonderful transparency of the atmosphere serves as a telescope for bringing distant objects near, making the whole scene to the untrained eye of a stranger, one of pleasing illusion. Of all things, the snow-covered Wasatch Range, in the full splendor of a sunshine which has brought Summer to the plains, impresses me as "put upon the stage." *

* * * * * *

The second Tabernacle, for afternoon service, seats 13,000 persons, and on great occasions its capacity is by no means sufficient. The fame of its great organ has gone abroad; it was built here—excepting the metallic pipes—by an Englishman Mormon; it is an elegant instrument to eye and ear. The choir is accompanies is large and sufficiently scientific to give a fine effect. The vast well-filled auditory and lively music gave me a kind of dissolving view of last season's Boston Jubilee; the more so that the leader of the choir, with his active baton, favoring us with only a back view, "might have been" P. Gilmore. * * *

The house has an echo, very annoying. * * * Then from time to time a baby cries in some part of the house, when the echoes multiply ridiculously, till you might fancy yourself in a monkeys' encampment. With but a single fault the Tabernacle is a grand structure. Oval in form, its roof an unbroken, self-sustaining dome, a distant view suggests an emigrant wagon under a giant's microscope. The large area it covers, naturally detracts from the effect of its height, especially from without. The great windows are placed sidewise; the result is not, as in so many of our modern churches, a burlesque upon illumination. The stone walls are laid with massive piers, forming deep recesses within, in which are doors sufficiently numerous to permit the most crowded congregation to pass out in the fewest moments.

The three houses of worship—past, present and future—are enclosed with a high fence, by which they seem hermetically sealed. Being in contrast with the streets, which are everywhere planted with trees, I was struck by the utter absence of tree or shrub within the Tabernacle yard, which exhibits only a rather unequal struggle between grass and gravel, like the parade ground on Boston Common.

* * * * *

I remarked to this lady—"Your reference to polygamy just now gives me to feel a little license in speaking of the same subject, though it is a delicate one." "It is a delicate subject to you," was the answer, "but not to us. It only needs to be understood, and it is the holiest and best of institutions." If this is infatuation, it has lasted twenty-nine years, and is good for as many more.
