THE CURIOUS BROTHERS.
 The Curious Brothers, who have been playing in a highly artistic style last evening, Mr. Handmann, evincing in the person of the twin brothers, a degree of his talent that is rarely attained in the profession. He possesses many natural advantages besides the power of completely identifying himself with the character he represents, and his clear conceptions of the part become an embodiment of the author's idea. His figure is tall and commanding, and his voice is clear, deep and resonant, especially when not raised to a shout. His richness of most noticeable when he plays the piano, and when he sings, or a little higher, and when he sings, the pathetic or emotional feelings of the human mind, he has a way of expressing them that is almost perfect. He is a true artist, and his playing is a pleasure to the audience. He is a true artist, and his playing is a pleasure to the audience. He is a true artist, and his playing is a pleasure to the audience.
