As soon as the snows shall have sufficiently melted to make access possible, there will be formally opened what is said to be the highest library in the world. This is the library erected by Queen Margherita of Italy, as a memorial to her husband, King Humbert, situated on the summit of the Pic d'Anin, a mountain over 10,000 feet high, in the Monte Rosa range of the Alps. It is to be devoted almost entirely to Alpine literature, photographs, and relief maps, including contributions from all the noted Alpinists in Europe and America. The building of this library, has been in progress for several years, as all materials had to be carried up from the valley, and men could work only a few months every year.

In the issue of United States consular reports for December, 1904, some interesting facts are given as to the character, growth, and use of the Imperial Library of Japan. The youngest of all the important national libraries, it has already attained to a total of 219,000 volumes, 45,000 of which are European or American books. Practically the whole of this collection is entirely free of access to the public, and a very large part of it is free for home use. In the number of persons who are allowed to borrow books, the claim is made that this library is unequalled among all the national libraries of the world, the number being between 4,500 and 4,600. Of the classes of books called for, those on religious subjects are in the least demand, only a little over 1 per cent of the total issue being of that class. Works most in demand belong to the classes of mathematics, natural science, history, and general literature, the demand for works on mathematics being especially striking.

You can never have perfect freedom of speech till you get the Independent phone in your house. That's right.

WOMAN'S WORLD.

Cheese Spears.—Four ounces of flour, one-half pint of cold water, one ounce of butter, two eggs, pepper, salt and cayenne; three ounces of grated cheese. Fry the flour in a cold oven, then sift. Put the water, butter in a pan and let boil while adding the flour. Stir well, then take from the fire, and when nearly cold add the eggs, then the cheese. Have ready a cup of boiling fat and drop teaspoonfuls of the mixture into it. Fry a golden brown and drain on paper.

Dates Fritters.—Make a stiff batter by mixing together a cupful of sweet milk, two of flour, a tablespoonful of melted butter and a spoonful of salt, and stir in a cupful of washed and stoned dates. Drop in large spoonfuls into hot fat and fry a delicate brown. Serve with a sour sauce. A good one is made thus: Put a piece of butter the size of an egg into an earthen bowl and stir in a tablespoonful of flour. When smooth add a cupful of boiling water, three tablespoonfuls of sharp vinegar or the juice of a lemon, a tablespoonful of sugar, and stir constantly until the desired consistency.

Cheese and Nut Sandwiches.—Chop

TO WED POOR JEWESS.

The announcement that James Garfield Phelps Stokes, the young settlement worker and descendant of one of the proudest and wealthiest families in New York, was to wed Rose Harriet Pastor, a poor Jewess, came as a surprise. Mr. Stokes is said to be worth $5,000,000 in his own right, and is heir to many more millions. He has spent most of his life in charity work.

fine a cupful of peanut meats and the same amount of American cheese, make a paste of them and spread over water-thin slices of cream bread, and roll in lettuce leaves.

Cheese and Walnut Sandwiches.—Take long, salted crackers and spread with a mixture of white cream cheese and melted English walnuts, place a buttered cracker on top of this and so on in the oven until the edges are delicately browned, and the cheese sufficiently melted to hold the two crackers together.

Oyster Salad. (With Tomato Dressing.)—Lay a desired number of medium-sized oysters in a salad dish lined with lettuce leaves and pour over them a dressing made of tomato (steamed) and seasoned with cayenne and salt, and over this a sprinkling of grated cheese.

This is the time when the Easter bride is looking about for the "eternity" of her trousseau, and when her friends are just as keenly alert for some dainty novelty with which to show their affection, or the semblance of it.

Scarcely it is not for lack of ideas that they search day after day, for never before have the shops displayed a more tempting array of beautiful and novel gifts than now. It is a poetic slim pocketbook or marvelously poetic sense that cannot find something out of the ordinary for the prospective Easter bride.

These are, for example, those jewel bedecked and dainty in all sorts of fanciful designs, also new candleholders for the dressing table. The latter have silver snail-shaped around to form the base, the raised head forming the stick, while the round holds the candle, with its pretty flower, mosaic or Turkish shade.

Some new card trays are of burnt wood and there are also exquisitely designed glove and handkerchief boxes of sandal wood inlaid with pearl or beautifully carved.

Many of the matrons are bestowing rich oriental capes and scarfs on their young friends, while others are presenting beautiful boxes, say five or ten yards, laid in a dainty white box and tied at either end with huge bow of white satin ribbon. A spray of orange blossoms thrust through one of the bows adds to the suggestiveness.

People are weary of giving, as they are of receiving, the conventional gift of a "dozen solid silver teaspoons" or "two dozen salad forks." A set of this or a set of that, so almost any ordinary idea is welcomed and prized. The most any bride of any station will doubly appreciate some novelty, a luxury, which, perchance, if not given at her wedding day, she must do without while the forks and spoons and trays will be hers as a matter of course.

Now, indeed, is the reason when the housekeeper falls upon evil days. With the beginning of house cleaning is manifold worry and anxious thought about getting rid of the moths that have ruled by taken "quarters" under the shadow of the upholstery button and pursuing their way of crime through the wall and warp of valuable rugs, and furs that were Christmas sacrifices from one's nearest.

In fact, there is no marauding animal so wholly dead to any sense of the property right of mere human beings as the merry, headless, light-winged moth. There are no limits to his voracity. He builds his home in the towering ostrich plume or priceless embroidery from Russia with equal insouciance.

At this season the housekeeper expects to encounter him anywhere, except, possibly, in fire of water, the only elements which do not seem to contribute home comfort from a moth's point of view.

And not only does the impudent, nondestructible moth feed on all the material surroundings that are to make home most dear, but with the perfect confidence of the most official animal in the world, he usually grows fat and prosperous upon deadly poisons that have been prepared from time to time for his extermination. You can't trust a moth even with poison.

And camphor and naphthalene and moth exorcism—oh, all these boasted triumphs in the face of the fact that a moth which might be an inviolate in a cashmere vest, grows sturdy and cozy on the very best of these substances prepared for his downfall.

Yet, having life, it does not seem reasonable that he should be exempt from all the laws that govern animal existence, as he grows fat on camphor and poison, it is a reasonable conclusion that he can be checked by feeding the particularly sent of food that disagrees with him.

The modern housekeeper most often favors simple methods in her war. She finds that insecticide, harmless preparations—disinfectants—accompany more than high priced and dangerous concoctions. Especially is this her experience in trying to free her house from moths.

After battling with them stinging and fall for endless seasons, she has found that the most exterminator of moths is expensive and harmful to pure furs. If, during the spring housecleaning, moths are discovered along the edges of the carpets, they are taken up and cleaned, and in the winter when the fur is sprinkled three or four inches under the edge all the way round the room, and dusted in the carpet where the moths have rested. Treat rugs in the same way, that is, dust boxes in the moth patches and sprinkle it under the edge or whole surface if necessary.

If moths are in upholstered furniture, clean the furniture thoroughly with a whisk-broom and press borax powder in the loops and seams and under the buttons.

Powdered borax is also a most effective preventive of moth invasions if it is sprinkled over webbing that are being packed for the summer. After garments are folded, put the powder in the creases, and in the corner of boxes and trunks in which clothes are packed. There is no danger of any injury from the powder and for successful housekeepers it is regarded as almost infallible.

An additional safeguard from moths is to make sure that winter articles are thoroughly cleaned before being stored. Moths are especially attracted with dust or stains or grease spots. So it is a very wise precaution to first brush vigorously everything, not cannot be washed, and then to clean with benzine every spot of stain. Of course, when articles can be washed it is an infallible rule.

And then, don't roll things up in tight packages. It makes better air circulation and the articles are a drier sight when there is a roll for them to be. Fold things neatly and pack them flat and make sure that they are completely wrapped in newspapers to prevent the attempt to invade, which the cotton bug as well as the moth make in warm weather. When the fall days come, and save from and fatigue.
