"WE WILL FINISH THE TUNE BY AND BY."

For death made him shudder and sigh; And while dying a smile lit his face and said. "We will finish the tune by and by."

He recently played at the full dress parade, Never dreaming that death was so nigh; No more will he lead in our gay serenade, He will finish the tune by and by.

The moments but few e'er he die; His lips move in whispers, the words they come slow, "We will finish the tune by and by."

THE CURIOUS DEAD SEA. TRAVELER'S EXPERIENCE-EFFECTS OF THE WATER.

Then I prepared for that rare lux-ury (?) a bath in the Dead sea. The heat was terrific, but I could not resist the temptation. Moreover, I wished to test the buoyancy of the water; so I threw away the umbrella upon which most bathers rely, and disrobing, bold-ly waded in. I substantiated the state-ments of those who maintain that it is ly waded in. I substantiated the state-ments of those who maintain that it is impossible to sink in the water, by throwing myself recklessly in with closed eyes. Not only was it impossi-ble to sifk, but I could scarcely re-gain my footing, so lightly did I float on the surface. I had been warned about getting the water into my eyes or mouth, but could not help it. Bah, what a malignant, nauscating mixture saddle, and my ankles were somewhat chafed from wielding the spurs. Mr Floyd told of bringing forty-two cadets down to the Dead sea once who cadets down to the Dead sea once who in the Globe-Democrat concerning in the Globe-Democrat concerning $1500 A new adoble house of 2 rooms. Block fourteen (14) in Jordan, containing cadets down to the Dead Sca Oscillator well finished high ceilings also Five 15 Acres, which is included within ly become very sore from the long ly become very sore from the long ride. They would bathe, and paid for the privilege by walking all the ten miles back to Jericho. They were to sore to sit in the saddle. My hair proved to be very sticky for an hour or so. I don't think I ever got so thoroughly salted down before. Nevertheless, there was no salt visible at the north end of the sea. It is at the south end, where there is no Jordan to partially purify the water, that the famed mountains of literal rock salt are to be seen. Ordinary sea water has about 4 per cent of salt in it, while the Dead sea has some 26 per sent. This per centage is fixed and steady despite all that the Lordan and other despite all that the Jordan and other streams can do to "heal the waters." Yet the effect of this water upon nimal life has been exaggerated. If birds do not fly accross It they certainly circle over it, and I am told that ducks sometimes swim far out on the sea. Of course no fish can live in it, but scientists have lately detected some very inferior organisms in it. There are also spots on the shore, remote from the point which I visited, where canebrakes, willows, tamarisks, and even wild oleanders, flourish with their etams, partly imparted in the their stems partly immersed in the waters. The presence of this vegetation is due to the presence of some fresh water streams near by. At various points sulpher springs exhale clouds of vapor. It was to these that Herod the Great went in order to be cured of his loathsome disease. There must have formerly been a smaller must have formerly been a smaller fresh water lake where the Dead sea now is, since we read that prior to the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, the plain was well watered, fertile and like a garden. An inflammable bitumen, like a garden. An inflammable bitumen, which crops out plentifully after earth-quakes nowadays, is supposed to have been the material upon which the conflagration fed. The Dead sea itzelf occupying the lowest depression on the face of the earth, has a maximum length of forty miles and a maximum breadth of eight and a half. The difference in level between it and the Meditteranean is no less than 1,312 feet, and to that extent would the projectors of the Palestine ship canal have to flood the Jordan valley, obliterating a vast tract of country, and changing the climate here altogether.—Jerusalem Cor. Kansas City Journal.

Immoral Literature.

A people's standard of intelligence and morality is invariably regulated by the standard of their literature. If of a low, triffling, immoral type, such will be the character of the people among whom it circulates. All history, experience and observation demonstrate this fact. It is to be found in the rise and fall of men and parties, nations and dynasties. Deprive a people of their literature and they degenerate into barbarism Limit them to immoral literature, and debauchery and crime are sure to overtake them sooner or later.

It costs no more to feed people on sound philosophy, draped in proper language, than it does to surjet them with cheap romance adorned in rags and polluted in filth But another obector replies that the public taste re juires such literature and the paper would not sell without it. If this b would not sell without it. If this be true, it simply proves that the public taste is perverted and public reform is seriously demanded. The pernicious influence of this standard of literature may not be so readily detected in the adult population as among the youth. In the one case character is formed and habits are fixed, while in the other character is in process of formation and habits may be changed or improved. If the family table or library is loaded with indecent literature and sensational trash, the youth of the country are not to be blamed the country are not to be blamed they grow up to be desperadoes and and in the penitentiary or on the gal-ws. Censure belongs not to the congdoers but to the parents or ardians who placed such temptature of children at an earlier period in our history and the increase of crime in our land is largely attributable to this neglect in the education of children. No feature of domestic discipline should be more scrupolously guarded than that which limits the selection of family literature. pers and books as produce a sound, althy, moral, social and political in-ence on the youth.

Come up stairs we will be alone and you throw some buffalo robes on the floor, so you will not get severely hurt, and if I dont upset you in short order I will buy both wine and dinner. Come." And the old gentleman took the young man by the arm, as if to pull him up-stairs. But he would not go. He looked ashamed and was much embarrassed by the smiles of those in the store.
