I could not help looking up; the clouds lay close upon the rocks, leaving no room for the lightning to dart downward, and it seemed to me that a lurid fire flashed through them from time to time, in a horizontal direction, and tore them asunder as it passed. Would there be no danger in standing upright? Whether or no, if I did not make an attempt to go on, the increasing cold

The leve of gold is such a base passion, that not a man but will deny its presence within himself, while he blusbes to know that he says is false, while, perhaps, be is gloating silently over its gratification.

Men prate dramatically of their indifference to money—of genius and high gifts instead of it—and every heart-throb tells that their indifference is assumed; and let genius fail to moet its payments, and have its notes of the main channel of the Weber liver, to a point due north of the Northwest corner of Kingston's fort, thence due West to the Great Salt Lake,
