THE COLOR OF THE SEA.

THE PROPHET JOSEPH SMITH. An inquiry into a subject so familia When Joseph Smith, then a lad less o everyone as the appearance, and more estecially the color, of the sea, seems at first sight to promise little that may prove to be either new, in-teresting, or useful. Ever since poet indited verse in praise of the "deep blue sea" or prime took on the brush than eighteen years of age, was told by he angel Moronf that his same should had for good and evil among all nations, kindreds, and tongues; or that i should be good, and evil spoken of blue sea," or painter took up the brush in order to portray the glories of the "azure main," it has been settled for us aud for all time that the sea is among all people, he could have had but an imperfect idea of the very thorough and literal manuer in which the prophecy would hasten to fulfillment. lue, and such expressions as the "blue Ve who live to-day, more than sixty cep," and the "blue ocean," have be-ome stereotyped phrases in the vocabyears since those words were spoken, with the history of interveving years lary of our language. Yet the fact well known to us, could not express that the waters of the sea sometimes appear, and very often are, of a differwith greater exactness, nor illustrate nore vividly, the manner in which the name and character of Joseph Smith have been treated by his contemporent color, forces itself on the attention of even the most superficial ob-server. As we take our stand upon aries. There is scarcely a man to day who will, with feelings of entire indifthe shore, the waves, which in the distance are of a dark blue tint, as-sume on nearer approach a more ference, utter that name or hear i spoken. There seems to be a power in greenish hue, until at last, laden with it that quickens feelings of reverence particles of sand or mud, stirred up and honor, or awakens those of hatred by their own commotion, they break at and scorn. During the last summer we our feet a yellow or brown mass of have taken part in a number of out-door meetings, gatherings at which water. Or if, from some tall cliff, we look down upon the sea, the latter often appears divided into light and people feel more at liberty than in a neeting house, to express their apdark colored patches, an appearance which we are at once tempted to proval or disapproval of the sentiments of the speaker, and we have seldom failed to notice that when mention has ascribe to the nature of the sea bottom, here composed of white or yellow been made of the name of Joseph sands, there of dark rock, covered with Smith, and testimony has been borne sea-weeds A glance at the map of the of the divinity of his mission, the hos-the teelings of unbelievers would be world, where we find such names as the 'Red Sca," the "Yellow Sea," the "Black Sea," the "White Sea," also aroused and excitement would run high. We have heard many of our missionary Elders say that their exshows that other colors besides blue have attracted the attention, and imperience was similar. On such occa-sions the words of the angel to the pressed themselves upon the memory, of the early navigators of these seas, oor, unknown, illiterate youth of the ilthough in some of the instances just ackwoods of America come vividly to noted the name probably had its orighe mind. The Latter day Saints very well unn, not in the actual color of the water, out in the aspect of the surrounding lerstand the cause of this intense eeling. The name of Joseph Smith is land, such for example as the gloomy and inhospitable looking coasts of the Black Sea, and the snow-clad iceuggestive of the glorious principle of minediate revelation, which the ad-cersary of men's souls recognizes as fringed shores of the White Sea. Again, the manner in which the sea surface reflects the varying hues of the ie one most intimately associated with the salvation of the human family, and he stirs up the opposition of all who day, from the pearly gray of dawn to the crimson gold of sunset, or changes its tints according to the state of the flow themselves to be influenced by weather, from cerulean blue to an inky black, is well known to all dwellers by the sea side. However, it is not with

It is the echo of that cry which ages ago demanded the crucifixion of ur Savior; it is the expression of that wicked spirit which has opposed and vilified the servants of God from the beginning, and which so far from being satisfied with the martyrdom of Joseph Smith, has pursued his legitimate sucssors with the same relentless hate more or less permanency in different pursues the chief representative of
