

THE BELLMAN.

A short time ago the local papers announced and lamented the death of the venerable bellman of Clerkenwell parish. With him has died this office in that district; and we believe that throughout the metropolis the bells and proclamations of these once important functionaries have now ceased to be heard. Before the day of modern newspapers, and even for long afterwards, the bellman was almost the only means available of advertising the wants of trade and commerce, and the other miscellaneous matters which form such a large portion of numerous periodicals of the present day. In some ancient or out of the way places, the parish town bellman still exists; shown, even in these cases of much of his former importance; but in a few years the bellman will be no longer heard in England. The duties of the bellman were various; he officiated at royal proclamations, in the absence of the trumpeters of the shires or boroughs; he had at times to do with the writs at assizes, and with the "cr ing" of affairs. After several sonorous preliminary tolls of his bell, he was wont thus to proceed: "Oh, yes! Oh, yes!! Oh, yes!!! Take notice, that a valuable cargo of corn—or fish, or timber, or other merchandise,—has arrived at—, and will be sold a—by— God Save the Queen!"—"And hang the crier" was often added by the assembled gamins. He also announced, with some formality, the sale or need of houses or lands; the loss of men, women, or children; he gave notice that a man would not be answerable for his wife's debts; or offered the sale of a child's caul (not seldom still to be seen in the Times and other advertisers) for behoof of those about to encounter the dangers of the deep. He also fulminated the orders of the local authorities. In times of pestilence he gave forth, in the streets, lanes, and alleys, instructions of a sanitary nature; and in days of political excitement he gave the necessary warning for attention to the preservation of the peace, and fitly other important matters. —[London Builder.

THE LARGEST CITY—POPULATION AND COMMERCE OF JEDDO.

A very erroneous idea is indulged in by many people in relation to the largest city in the known world, many very confidently asserting that London, or, as it is frequently termed, the great M tropolis, is far superior, both in size and number of inhabitants. But such is not the case. Jeddo, the capital of Japan, is, without exception, the largest and most populous city in the world.

It counts the vast number of one million five hundred thousand dwellings, and five millions of human souls. Many of the streets are nineteen Japanese in length, which are equivalent to twenty-two English miles.

The commerce of Jeddo far exceeds that of any other city in the world, and the sea, along its coast, is constantly white with sails. Their vessels sail to the southern portion of the empire, where they are laden with rice, tea, sea-coal, tobacco, silk, cotton, and tropical fruits, all of which and a ready market in the north, and then return freighted with corn, salt, oil, isinglass, and various other productions of the north, which have a market in the south.

—Good temper, like a sunny day, sheds a brightness over everything.
