Flood at Provo. -Brother H. H. Cluff, of Provo, came up from that town last evening. We learn from him that the citizens of that burg were treated to a flood on a small scale on Friday night. A snowslide rushed into Provo River in the canyon, making a complete dam across the stream, Of course, a considerable body of water accumulated, and when the temporary obstruction gave way on Friday night, the aqueous fluid came down with a rush, flooding a considerable portion of the western division of the town. There is some damage to stackyards and the people had great difficulty in getting about until the water subsided. No great damage was done to property.

A SNOWSLIDE NEAR KAMAS GEORGE WII LIAMS IS ENATCHED FROM THE JAWS OF DEATH.

We are indebted to Bishop S. F. Atwood for the following account of a narrow escape from death by a snowslide:

"On Friday last, January 28th, at about 4 o'clock p. m., while Mr. Samuel Williams and his two sons, Samuel E. and George, all residents of Kamas, were teaming in the north fork of Beaver Canyon, they were overtaken by a snowslide, East Temple Street were flooded which came very nearly burying with water from the sect, and consequently are covered with glassy ice. Very dangerous to pedesand the team he was driving. He and the team were completely buried to the depth of four or five feet. The father and the other son were luckily provided with shovels, which they diligently used, and providentially struck the exact spot where the young man was buried. East streets along South lemple Digging directly down they soon came to the head of the unfortunate man. He was insensible, and his face black with suffocation. His brother instantly busied himself removing the snow from around his head, and vigorously blowing into to-day, Chief Justice Hunter presiding, and after a brief session took time was removing the snow from time was removing the snow from around the body, to enable them to exhume it, which they succeeded in accomplishing, and soon resuscitated the unfortunate young man, who is now as well as ever. The oxen which he was driving were both dead when dug out."

On Saturday morning last, Freda crick T. Bradshaw and James Bradshaw his cousin, of Wellsville, went into what is called "New Canyon" where they had been getting out saw logs, to furnish Mr. J. The place was cleared where they had been, and they were hunting for another place to cut more, when they heard some frushing movement, and look-On Saturday morning last, Fredsome rushing movement, and looking up, saw to their dismay, they were caught in a snow slide without time to get away, for immediately the descending slide struck and knocked them two or three rods and carried them along with a rolling them along with a rolling them. carried them along with a rolling motion. The snow would bury them under then turn them up again and throw them along, and so continued to toss them about for the distance in the face all this time, but strange to say when the slide stopped they were within ten feet of each other and both partly buried in the snow. James was the first to get his liberty. He was just below the surface in a horizontal position, and by a little effort he soon got out. He then tle effort he soon got out. He then looked about him for his companion, whom he found about ten feet off planted in the snow up to his neck, in a perpendicular position and so packed in that he was entirely help-less. It was a work of some time to set him at liberty, as they had nothing to work with but their hands, having lost their axes when first struck.—Utah Journal.
