which I feel truly thankful, for without this heavenly boon a missionary in these lands is but of little service. The dense atmosphere in this country is a striking contrast when compared with our beautiful mountain atmosphere in Utah. I feel truly thankful that I have been accounted worthy to have so important a mission assigned me, for I realize that it is a weighty responsibility to assume, to be an herald of salvation to the children of men, to be beacons of light to a dark, benighted, corrupt, and priest-ridden generation. The nature of the mission requires a class of men to engage in its sacred duties and obligations in whom dwelleth the spirit of God richly, men wisdom, integrity and morcourage. When a missionary possesses those gifts and qualifications, it is astonishing the power and influence he carries with him, not only among the Saints but among the people of the world also. And cost.
