[For the Deseret News. SUMMIT OF ROCKY MOUNTAINS.

BY C. H. HOWARD.

Alone I stand upon the towering hight, And o'er the landscape cast an eager eye On lofty pinnacles that touch the sky, Aglow with roseate hues of sunset light.

Far down beneath I see the tiny rill, Threading the valley like a gleam of light; While, reaching far to utmost range of sight, Its silvery line reflects the mount and hill.

The scraggy pines that clothe the rugged side Of towering precipice and rock-bound wall; The voice of echo, starting to each call, Gives answer back in circles far and wide.

But snow-clad peaks on either side I view, Lifting their heads the very clouds among, In eloquence mute, yet passing speech of tongue Is theirs in language most sublime and true.

Humbled, I stand as on the verge of time, Amid the scenes not mortal foot hath trod; Eurapt I view these mighty works of God, And raise my soul unto the Great Sublime.

While thus I view this veiceless solitude, The mighty silence on each mountain crest, My soul attunes in harmony most blest. The Spirit calms with holy peace imbued. October 9, 1862.

LIFE.

Like opening flower in breeze of spring, Is life in youthful glow; While fragrant from the heart comes forth Rich notes unknown to woe. And happy in a guileless dream The sunny moments flow.

Then comes the time that dreams crase The careless joys of youth; And emulation spurs each arm, How weak or how uncouth, Until experience adds its strength To deeds of godlike truth.

In fancy's realm the wand'ring mind Its airy progress leads, And in imaginative wealth It leaves undone good deeds, Until deep waves of feeling rouse Virtues from 'midst of weeds.

"Tis manhood's hour in rich perfume, Like summer flower full blows, That casts around its fragrant breath-Tells us we're not alone, And that in strength and nobleness Is greatest wisdom shown.

And when with age are silvered o'er The locks once dark as night, Still happy we, if yet we seek Example great and bright. To guide our life in truthful path, By wisdom's glowing light.

Frosted with age our tottering steps Wend slowly to the tomb, Still like the flower that's cru hed and dead, Gives forth its sweet perfume; So will we live, our spirit's youth Is still in strength and bloom.

G. S. L. City, Oct., 1862.

ORION.

[For the Descret News. AUTUMN LEAVES.

Te are passing in your beauty, From a sunny world away, With your crimson hearts imprinted By the summer's glory-ray. Ye are folded in the garments That the golden sunlight weaves, For all its latest worshippers, Bright-tinted, autumn leaves.

Ye are passing in your beauty-I have seen ye in your prime, When ye mingled with the roses In the early summer time. I loved ye, when the bird-song trilled, Where now the wind-sob grieves; But ye are loveller, dearer now, Sweet, fading, sulumn leaves.

Ye are passing in your beauty, I had wept to see ye go; Were ye trampled down to perish, In the spring time's morning glow; But, to part with life, possessing All the laurels life achievos; I'd proudly share a fate so fair, Sun-painted, autumn leaves. S. E. CARMICHAEL.

Work is plenty and help in demand. Our Indian friends see no more big Snaix, but are making themselves useful among the farmers, andare fast learning the value of labor and the convenience of its product. Grain and vegetables are abundant, but money and merchandize rather scarce, yet and a short tail. Whoever will deliver the horse, or our population are nevertheless in good spirits, and by the industry of our mothers, wives, daughters and sisters we shall be clothed in the comfortable habiliments of home manufacture from sheep of our own raising. Afew thieves are about yet, and we learn that one was picked up near here a few days ago, though I cannot now give the particulars .-The rouges are watched.

Messrs. Matthews and Wagner are manufacturing a nice article of salt from the springs near Payson, and a rich vein each of alum and copperas has recently been discovered near the Sevier, which is said to give better promise in those coloring materials than any discovery heretofore made. Mr. Butler has discovered in sight of this place fair prospects of stone coal, which we believe he is following up with pick and shovel.

A general spirit and disposition seems prevalent to improve and increase our manufactures, open new lands, build better houses
