FOOLISH PLAY. IT seems almost impossible for some people to learn the folly, we might almost say, the crim-inality, of playing with fire-arms, another instance of which is given in our dispatches to-day, wherein the death of a wife was the sad result. How is it that peo-ple are so slow to learn that deadly the sad result. How is it that people are so slow to learn that deady weapons are dangerous, that they will kill under certain and varied circumstances, and therefore that great caution should be observed in the handling of them? Oight au-cevery one's native sense to be suff-cient to tell him agun or pistol is not be played with? What possesses people that they should triffe with fire-arms, when everybody knows that they are instruments of death and can not be handled thought-is from persons take leaves of their senses when they take agun or pis-tol into their hands. "Let us turn another lent in Time's great book, and we have another cluster of sparkling sum, the philo-sophical giants of the eighteenth century — Montesquieu, Voltaire, Rousseau, Buffon. They were, in-deed, great masters, and among their numerous disciples many were as great as them-selves. Diteot, d'Holback, d'Alembert, Condillac, Condercet, Crebillon, Le Eage, Beaumarchais, Chateaubrian, and de Stael. In the present century we have others as great as any who preceded them—Lamartine, Hugo de Vigny, Scribe. George Sand Balzac, Houlier, Karr, Beranger and de Musset; and lastly, the great historical and critical cycle which Sir Henry Rawlinson sends to the Times the following letter, which ind just reached him from Sir Samuel Baker. Sir Henry says:-The enclosure to Sir Samuel's let-ter, which was addressed to Sir Roderick Murchison, and which I have accordingly handed to Sir Bartle Frere, for communication to the Royal Geographical Society, gives a very graphic account of the nostilities with Kabrega and the slave dealers, which led to those sinister stories regarding the fate of the Baker expedition that were cir-culated in Alexandris a few months aro; and the letter also contained an ago; and the letter also contained an abstract of the information furnished historical and critical cycle which has brought forth Guizot, Taine, Thierry, Sismondi, Michelet, Mar-tin, Thiers, Mignet, Littre, and to Sin Samuel Baker by native merchants of Karagwe us to the junction of Lake Tanganyika with the Albert Nyanza, so as to form one body of water. Individual instances will be found in those countries which, perhaps, cau not be excelled by France; but her complete catalogue of literary stars is as far superior to theirs as the one body of water. This informa-tion, however convincing to Sir Samuel Baker at the time, cannot, of course, hold its ground against the positive evidence to the contrary since acquired by Livingstone and Stanley; and, indeed, it will be seen from the letter now published that when Baker, on his arrival at Khartoum, learned of Livingstone's visit to the north end of Tangan-vika without discovering any outabilities of a lady of the world
