

PERILS BY THE WAY.—A writer in the London Reader says that in that city the population is indefinitely augmented by hourly arrivals from all parts of the world. The metropolis is clasped, intersected, and undermined by railroads. Broad streets are building for the reception of the swaying multitude, the river is made to yield up a portion of its bed for the construction of a new highway, and gigantic hotels, springing up in all quarters, are unable to supply accomodation for the increasing crowds of visitors; and the crush and crowd are daily becoming more perilous to human life. Last year one hundred and forty persons were killed in the streets.

THERE is some religious difficulty in the public schools of Milford, Mass., caused by the Roman Catholic parents of the children refusing to submit to the school discipline, which requires the children to sing moral and patriotic songs and to bow the head in prayer. Consequently, a large number of pupils are out of school and they appear in procession in the streets, creating much excitement and ill-feeling.
