Once a farmer's name is on paper, and they get it on to a promissory note, and into the hands of an innocent party. I had a man come along here two years ago, with a patent churn, and he left it for my wife to try. She tried it, and liked it, and wanted to buy it, but he wouldn't sell it. He said he was just getting it pa-tented, and he wanted a few of the best farmers to try it, and make any sugges-tions they thought of to improve it and he would make the improvements and get it patented. He said when it was patented, and was a success, shouldn't sell any, as he should put i in the hands of some large factory build, and he would get a royalty. He wanted a few letters from those who had tried the churn, to send to our member of Congress, who had promised to go to the patent office for him He wrote out a letter to our member of Congress, saying that I believed there was merit in the churn, and I signed it.
