"Miss Johnson," authoress of "To Have and To Hold," says a reader of the Philadeiphia Telegraph, who knows her personally, "is the frailest, daint-lest little lady imaginable. Far from being the dashing creature one would think from reading her novels, she looks as if she had not strength or energy to put her thoughts on paper. She told me that her methods of work are some-what peculiar. She prefers to begin to write at 11 o'clock in the evening, when everything about her is still and there are no discordant noises to distract her attention. She writes only in the south and, as far as possible on moonlight nights, seated at a window, through which the moonlight is streaming."
