DESERET EVENING NEWS

Monday, October 7, 1889.

WESTERN NEWS NOTES.

From Tuesday's Tribune Extra.

On Saturday last Mrs. Mary Gallagher, wife of John Gallagher, residing on Warm creek, near Salt Lake, came to her death under circumstances which seem to have been of a peculiar nature. It seems that Mrs. Gallagher had been in bad health for some months past, and at times afflicted with melancholy. On the morning of her death it seems she was in that state of mind. Her husband left home at work in the usual manner, and when he returned at noon he found his wife lying on the floor, dead. "Dan, come to me, I am dying," she exclaimed a few feet from the dwelling door. She appears to have gone in after some meat and, her mind being affected by her health, loosened her clothes and started to lie down on the lounge with a heavy knife, and then attempted to cut herself a hard blow, but apparently her strength failed, as the knife did not pierce deep. The deceased left two children, both being the oldest being about five years. She was a sister of Mrs. Joseph Shaw of Ashland, Oregon, and a brother of Thomas Gallagher, a resident of Salt Lake for many years.

COLORADO.

While Sheriff Ashton and posse were engaged in hunt of Bland Mashburn, on the hill north of the town, about eight miles of giant powder exploded from some cause and Ed Driver and Jim Henry, both from Burke, were fatally injured, that event if they live are ruined. They may be blinded. The men had fired only three of four shots and must have been standing near the powder or leaning over it when the explosion came. Henry was blown nearly fifty feet down the hill, and is badly lacerated with rock. Both men have their faces fearfully injured.—Wall Street Press.

A fatal shooting scrape took place at Oreana, near Silver City. Dave Johnson and James Ray, both under the influence of liquor, engaged in a quarrel over election matters. A fight ensued, and Johnson shot Ray twice, one ball hitting him in the right breast and the other in the right side. The wounded man died. Johnson was placed under arrest.

COLORADO.

Denver, Oct. 6.—Joseph R. Rash, deputy United States marshal, arrived at Denver this morning from Salt Lake, whither he came by way of Cheyenne, where he left Parker, the Muddy Creek stage hold-up and United States mail robber, whose preliminary examination will take place at Rawlins at the next term of court. Mr. Rash said that last August he located the gang in the Blue mountains in Utah. Their names are Frank Rogers, alias Brown, and Dan Parks, alias Ricketts. Both of them are Utah desperadoes, though Rogers has lived in Texas a great deal. Parker was from Circle Valley originally. "I went in with a posse after them," said Rash, "but I only succeeded in getting Parker, after chasing the gang from Wyoming to Utah, thence to New Mexico, thence back to the Blue mountains and finally to the La Sall mountains, where Parker was captured after a desperate resistance. I failed to capture Rogers for the reason that the region is inhabited by "rustlers," horse thieves and more desperate criminal fugitives from Colorado, New Mexico and elsewhere, not to mention a lot of renegade Indians from the Ute and Pike river tribes. The moment a marshal steps into the region they light signal fires, and the game is up then. Those remarkable devils last year, by the way, killed over eight thousand deer just for the hides, and let the carcasses rot where killed. It is a hard country, and a marshal takes his life into his hands when he goes into it, but I got one of my men, and shouldn't wonder if I bagged the other one yet. The ranches are sixty to seventy miles apart, and it is hundreds of miles from the railroads."—Tribune.

The Moss county bank managers have finally concluded to erect a large and handsome structure where their building now stands.

The Czar Paid the Draft.

"The funniest thing happened to me once," remarked a St. Louis business man visiting in this city. "I had more credit than cash and more cash, perhaps, than sense. I wanted to use about $600, and I drew on the czar of Russia for $287. I expected, of course, that the czar would go to protest, but thought that it would take three months for the draft to go across the water and return, and by that time I was pretty positive that I would be able to pull out of the hole. To my utter astonishment the draft was paid, but I received a note signed by the czar stating that it was necessary for him to protect his credit and that he would honor the draft this time, though he could not imagine what he could owe an American in a far away city. However, he warned me that he would investigate if he heard anything more from me. I have not yet made up my mind whether the proper policy would have been to send that money back to the czar. Being entirely ignorant of court rules and court etiquette I have concluded to wait until Russia becomes a republic, and then I will send the money to the czar.—Kansas City Times.

Something in It.

Brown—Tom's a handsome pocket book.

Robinson—Yes, it's a birthday present from my wife.

Brown—Did she put anything in it before she gave it to you?

Robinson—Oh, yes, the unpaid bill for the pocket-book was in it.—Ex

Buying Christmas Presents.

"I've been about among the summer shops all the morning," said one lady to another on the piazza of a Saratoga hotel recently, and I have picked up quite an accumulation of Christmas gifts. I always buy them at this time," she went on, "and put them away until just before the holidays, when I start them out. In that way I avoid any rush and fatigue at the last moment." There is a fair of her companions agreed with her, for a large, vivacious young woman, dissembled emphatically.

"I call that dreadful," she announced. "Fancy selecting Christmas presents in cold blood like it were. I could never do it. I should be guided by economy and prudence, I know, and pull my purse strings together. I never buy a single present till the genuine Christmas fever is on me; till the shops are gay with pretty things and crowded with shoppers. Then I join the throng and share the infatuation. I rush right and left all day long and am in an agony of suspense and indecision; what I want finally comes to me by inspiration, and then it is such a satisfaction to have settled upon it.

"Why, half the joy of the season would be lost to me without that delightful rush and tustle and worry. It seems to me almost sacrilegious to take Christmas time by the forelock. I positively could not do it." All of which goes to show how complex and intricate a thing is a woman's method of reasoning.—New York Times.

Ilmakkur, the Barometer Stone.

A Finland newspaper mentions a curious stone in the northern part of that country, which serves the people instead of a barometer. This stone, which they call "Ilmakkur," turns black, or blackish gray, when foul weather is approaching; fine weather has the effect of turning it almost white. The Finns regard the stone with superstitious reverence, but the scientists says that its changes in color are due to salts contained in its composition.—Ex.

Thirty Eggs in Fifteen Minutes.

The champion hard boiled egg eater of the world is Mr. Louis Ledger, of New York. That dyspepsia defying young man has eaten thirty hard boiled eggs in fifteen minutes. This triumph of appetite over hard boiled eggs was won at a contest in the Bowery.

Half an hour after Mr. Ledger had finished the thirtieth hard boiled egg he walked into a restaurant and complained of being hungry. He had consumed sixty ounces of eggs, or the equivalent of seven and a half pounds of beefsteak, in a quarter of an hour, and half an hour later he wanted coffee and squabs on toast.—New York Journal.

Bad's Toy with Your Eyes.

Many people are troubled with itching eyes and try all sorts of washes. The eyes is one of the most valuable organs of the body. Unfortunately for careless humanity it is also one of the most delicate. It does not pay to trifle with it. The best way to treat itching is to use a cool, weak salt water wash every few hours. If this does no good go to a physician who makes a specialty of eye diseases.—N. Y. Star.

The Awful English Language Again.

Dealer—Now, here is a beautiful piece, madam; you will see how elaborately made it is!

Fair Customer—Yes; but I'm afraid that will be too expensive; haven't you something of the same kind, with rather less—er—elaborate chastity about it?—Judy.

He Couldn't Help It.

"I think of all silly names Adolphus is the worst!" she suddenly exclaimed after a dull conversational lull.

"Do you?" remarked the dude meekly. "That's the name my mamma gave me."—Harper's Bazar.

The Rule Works Both Ways.

Mrs. Snodgrass—Your husband complains that he can't smoke the cigars you bought for him.

Mrs. Snively—Well, I can't wear the bonnet he selected for me, either.—N. Y. Sun.

The Usual Remark Reversed.

"What do you think of my photograph?"

"It is very beautiful, but I do not think you do it justice."—Harper's Bazaar.

A New Collar Bone.

A boy of 18 years was admitted to the Mount Sinai Hospital suffering from a swelling over the region of the collar bone. It was evident that the bone was deeply affected and the only recourse was an operation, which was made. The entire bone was found dead, destroyed by inflammatory action, necessitating its removal, but in doing so the membrane immediately next to it and which nourishes the bone was carefully incised, stripped from the bone and replaced in the wound as near as possible in its original position, the object being to have it form new bone matter throughout its length and thus reproduce an entire collar bone. The wound having been dressed the arm was subsequently kept in the same position that a fracture of the collar bone would have required, the result being that ten weeks after the operation the patient was discharged with a brand new collar bone, completely reproduced with new joints at either end, and the perfect use of his arms.—New York World.

Nevada's Census.

The census bureau officially announces that the population of the State of Nevada is 44,328, a loss of 17,959 during the past decade. The principal cities of the State are all small, and with the exception of the capital they have decreased in population in about the same ratio as the whole State. Virginia City, which was the largest in 1880, having then 10,170, is still the metropolis with a population of 6,337. It has lost nearly one-half of its population. Carson City, the capital, now rates second in size with a population of 4,800. In 1880 it had 4,259, while Gold Hill, which now is only 2,073, was then a city of 4,434 people.

A Fair Average Cost.

Mrs. Cumso—You've seen those Dollar Dinner Bills-of-Fare in the household magazines?

Mrs. Faugle—Yes; I got one up the other day.

"How much did it cost you?"

"Three dollars and a half."—Puck.

Had to Leave all His Jokes.

Managing Editor—Has Funniman sent in his joke column yet?

"No, sir, he's very sick, and the doctor says he can't live another week."

"Then be sure and tell him to send in a couple of extra columns this week."—Boston Times.

A Hopeless Case.

"Can nothing more be done for the prisoner, Mr. Brief?"

"I fear not, sir."

"The legal expedients are all exhausted, are they?"

"No, but the prisoner's money is."

The Wild Waves.

The question, "What are the wild waves saying?" has never been satisfactorily answered.

The most that can be said is, they are generally announcing the doings of some kind or other.—Harper's Bazar.
