CITY WATER SUPPLY.

Col. E. F. Holmes Writes from New York on the Subject.

Col. E. F. Holmes, now in New York City, taking an active interest in the water supply for this city, and writes to a Salt Lake friend, under date of Dec. 1, he says: "It may not have gone quite as far as the original Commercial club plan, but it's along the same lines, so far as it does go, and those other features can be taken up at some time in the future if necessary. I am particularly anxious that this should go through now because the greater the water supply the national irrigation law naturally has connection with this movement. If there is anything more that I can do I wish you would advise me; also as to the situation in regard to the Utah lake proposition. If you have a copy of the contract under the Water Users' association I wish you would mail me one here and such other matter as you think would interest me. I will be probably going to Washington within 10 days and if there is anything there that you want me to look after please advise."

Holmes is particularly interested because of his proposed improvement on the Eighteenth ward square, where he would like to erect a great terrace of apartment houses to cost nearly a million; but until some definite understanding is arrived at on the matter of a water supply, he hardly feels like laying out so large a sum of money.

Coughing Spell Caused Death.

"Harry Duckwell, aged 35 years, choked to death early yesterday morning at his home, in the presence of his wife and child. He contracted a slight cold a few days ago and paid but little attention to it. Yesterday morning he was seized with a fit of coughing which continued for some time. His wife sent for a physician but before he could arrive another coughing spell came on and Duckwell died from suffocation." - St. Louis Democrat, Dec. 1, 1904. Ballard's Horehound Syrup would have saved him. See, see and H.O. Sold by Z. C. M. I. Drug Dept.

LIFE ON THE "STRIP."

Interesting Testimony in the Selling-Liquor-to-Indians Case.

At a trial in which Indian braves from the Uintah reservation were the principal witnesses, Joseph Hicks yesterday found guilty in the United States court of selling liquor to the Indians. Arguments in the case were concluded at 5 o'clock, at which time the grand jury retired to find a verdict. In three hours it returned, with a finding of guilty and a recommendation of mercy.

Hicks was tried under an indictment from the grand jury, charging him with selling two bottles of liquor to two Indians named Quinane and Ned, wards of the government, and in charge of the United States Indian agent at White Rocks. Both Indians swore that he did sell them the whisky, and he, in defense, claimed that it was taken away from him forcibly by them.

The trial was replete with incidents throwing interesting side lights on reservation life, and on the "strip," the little stretch of "no man's land" that runs a dozen yards wide, along the edge of the reservation because of a discrepancy in two surveys, which fall to bring official boundaries together.

The testimony of the defense yesterday was aimed at breaking down the reputation for truth and veracity of the Indian witnesses. On the stand Indians swore that the reputation of Ned and Quinane for truth and veracity was poorer than that of most Indians, and white men swore that it was better than that of most white men. An Indian testified that he had been put in jail in Salt Lake, not because he was overfull of firewater, but because he refused to shake hands with another Indian witness, with whom he had quarried on an old feud, and against whom he carried a grudge.

Mr. Miller, an acting Indian agent, testified that he had received instructions from his superior to run down the liquor selling business, and locate the men engaged in it. Accordingly on Thanksgiving day, 1903, among the merry-makers who went down to the strip to join the hard-breathed revelry, went two Indian braves with money in their pockets, and police uniforms on their backs, both furnished by Uncle Sam. The money to be invested in "booze" and duly and truly reported to the agent to be kept as testimony against the seller.

A true and official report was made that night. But next morning when the two Indian braves had been sufficiently sobered up they turned over two bottles, and confessed that although they appeared to be full of whisky, they were in reality full of water, and whisky mixed, and that on the way home with the exhibits they had indulged to the extent of half a bottle each, and hidden the evidence of the theft by replacing it with water. They named Hicks as the man they secured the whisky from, and this resulted in the filing of the suit.

The trial of Robert Reynolds, a companion of Hicks in the affair, was begun this morning, and it is expected that it will be concluded by tonight.

KINDNESS TO ANIMALS.

Interesting Address by Rev. Dr. Padon To School Children.

Yesterday afternoon the principals of the city schools were addressed by Rev. William Padon of the First Congregational church on the subject of kindness and humane work in the school. He dealt with the causes of cruelty, and the ways in which school children can help in overcoming them. He spoke in part as follows:

"Many animals are ill used because their masters do not know how to give them proper care. A horse or dog may be real ill and almost unable to work, without the owner being aware of its condition. It is cruelty to keep an animal in the harness when it is suffering, and children should be taught how to know when a beast is unwell. Persons with irritable dispositions are much inclined to vent their ill temper and rage on their poor animals."

In some schools the principals meet once a month in an organized body to care for birds and animals and receive instructions in regard to dumb creatures. This, to my mind, is not so well as having the teacher instill humane principles into the pupils every day as the occasion affords. It should be made a part of the daily work and not a formal periodic task. The children will then become imbued with humane ideas and learn much about the care of the "little brothers of the earth and air."

At the conclusion of the lecture humane literature was distributed to those present. Next Wednesday the principals will be addressed by Charles Gilbert, associate editor of "Stepping Stones to Education." He will pass through Utah on that date, en route to California.
