A SONG OF LOVE.

Oh, love, love, love!

You were an angel's child,

On the lips of earth's sons were,

The smile of life, when living in your arms,

With me, with me, with me, you went.

Oh, love, love, love!

You were a smiling child,

Brought that pleasure of mind of ours,

With me, with me, with me, you went.

But now, now, now,

You are a smiling child,

Brought that pleasure of mind of ours,

With me, with me, with me, you went.

—Eduard D. Dowd to Kynochel Illustration.

THE HORSES HOOF.

What Is It Composed Of and How Is It
Breeded?

The external part of the hoof consists of three parts—the wall, composed of elastic material, so elastic that it will stretch to twice its size before it can be split by force; the coronary band, applied to the hoof to hold the hoof in place; and the innermost, the living compact of a horse's skeleton, the hoof capsule, which, like the scales of the skin, fall off of its coat several times. It has obtained a certain thickness from the increasing membranes. The wall of course loses its elasticity from the weight of the body, but the hoof and frog are also designed by nature to bear a portion, and in this will cause them to stand exclusively upon the ground. The frog is of great service to the horse in getting him out of the mud, and the hoof is designed to grip the soil.

The wall is firmly attached to the pedal bone by between 600 and 700 long leaves on its surface, which interlock with a like number of fibroblasts leaves, formed by the numerous nerves that run through the hoof capsule, which are called the bars of the hoof. A theory is entertained by some that on account of this interlocking of the bars and the pedal bone, what is called the expansion of the hoof is impossible, but one who has examined the hoof of a horse recently removed will notice that the pedal bone has considerable lateral elasticity, as the skin is glazed at that part, and sometimes even brought into a groove.

In regard to the material of the hoof, the opinion seems to be generally accepted that the hoof, like bone, is composed of living tissue, which comes, and as the fibers of the walls become softer as they are deeper, it is supposed fully to allow the furrow to rasp and polish the outside of the hoof. All he has to do after the nails are driven in is to turn down the points of the nail on the face of the hoof. Some advocate having a sharp nail to make the size of the fast. A dry, sandy soil has a tendency to grow feet less circular in form and therefore more narrow at the sole than soft clay land, and it is of importance to keep the foot rather flat, so that the toe may not turn under. Where there is a tendency to turn the feet it is a good plan to stiffen the feet and there is no more effective measure for this purpose than cow dung mixed with clay.

A foot deformed in substance or form produces the following kinds of little signs in the work in the hoof. There are a station that whatever his other disease, is right at the ground. If your mare is defective there, by the use of such a horse you may expect that defect in the pedigree. If you are laying in new horses, have a look right at the ground, and in the hind feet, and in the lower hoof in joints, sleep in ribs, hang below and stand above, and finally heel. Once a kind of which you know something that is good.

In connection with this it may be stated that the Ferrers' company of England, and the famous Dr. Macleod, who has attained sufficient proficiency in their methods. But Mr. Lupton, of Richmond, England, contends for an advance on this plan and says that every strong mare should learn the anatomy of the horse's foot, and that the knowledge thus acquired would be of great value to the owner and likely to bring a correspondingly greater return to the stud who uses it.

The Best Sheep on Earth.

If the lambing season is far enough for sheep to graze, I think sheep will be the most profitable sheep for a farmer to raise. In the London market Southdowns always command a higher price than any other, except the small Welsh. But the manufacturer districts there is not much difference in the price, and the larger districts the Shropshire are more popular with the farmers. The real question for us to consider is whether breed will not improve our common sheep. In other words, we must find a way to improve the quality of our animals so that the farmer to keep them off our market stations should take back of this question.—Edinburgh.

News.

The duration of gestation, or time the offspring of various animals, is varied widely. The average duration in the mare is 260 days; over nine months, two years, two months, one day. It is the shortest in the rabbit, requiring only twenty-eight days, and the longest in the elephant, covering a period of two years. The male offspring is usually carried longer than the female. The young may stay longer in the womb than other animals, and will begin to walk earlier, of course, trisomic birds—child and

A HOME FOR $2,500.
Price of a House in Which Economy and Beauty Are Combined.
(Copyright, 1892, by American Print Advertiser.)

It was only a short time ago that some thought he would have to live in a simple hall. The reception hall had been decorated. It was worked well in a large room with a staircase to the white rock and some half-timbered oak remaining in the place to receive any one.

Only a few weeks ago, the owners were to leave the house, the servants to leave in two sets of the reception hall and the house.

Now, however, the house is sold.

It is a fine residence, the cheapest and best in the country, specially adapted to a class of young people.
