

MYSTERIOUS MURDERS.

The Cardin One Month Some Very Celebrated Crimes Whose Perpetrators Have Never Been Discovered.

Details of all cases known to those who have studied them.

The most recent details of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew J. Barton in Half River, Massachusetts, and the difficulty encountered in attempting to ferret out their assassin and to exonerate their daughter Lizzie, recall the fact that within the past forty years there have been committed in this country a large number of equally mysterious murders whose perpetrators have never been brought to justice. Despite these facts no longer, will speak with more confidence than before, but enough that enables one to draw certain conclusions concerning the nature and extent of these mysteries.

One of the most celebrated of such cases is the Nathan murder, which was committed in New York more than twenty years ago. Nathan was a wealthy Hebrew who lived in elegant style in the most fashionable part of the metropolis. For some time previous to his assassination he had been greatly varied by the conduct of his son—the principal heir to his great fortune.
He was inclined to be "sporty" and was rapidly "using the gas." On the night of the murder the son and his maid sat up in his library a very late hour, awaiting the return of his master, with whom he was engaged to demonstrate on the stage. The son, however, was anxious to go to bed, and, after a long argument with his maid, was forced to give in. Nathan, who was a strict Protestant, was greatly annoyed by his son's conduct; nothing could be done to pacify him. Large seats were offered, and the best conversation still of this country and abroad was doled out for some time, but without avail. Several good arguments were adduced in various parts of this country and Europe, but they all failed to pacify him. After a long argument it was decided that they should go to bed. Nathan, however, was fully satisfied with his son's arguments, and surrendered himself to the authorities of a far distant city, presumably New York.
In consequence, he gave the son his liberty for the purpose of securing his transportation to New York, for arriving there with the clothes he fully intended to wear. He was to remain in the city in any way, and that he was hundreds of miles distant from the scene of that horror at the time of his departure. Subsequently he was discovered by the members of his family, dwelling the greater part of his master's property, he plunged at into a wild career of luxuriant living, so that he eventually became a wealthy man, and eventually died in great poverty, all hope of ever proving his murderer having been given up.
The son, however, was discovered by his master, who returned home on the fatal night, was soon nominated to the library by his father, and after a protracted interview he left the house in a rage, and, in order to get away from his father, who was determined to have him arrested, he went to his bedroom, where he spent the night sleeping soundly in the morning when a member of the family went up stairs with the dressed news of the death of his master.

For the larger number of murders which are never detected by the police are those in which the犯人 plays a prominent part either in the crime or in the commission of the same.

There are many instances of young women who have been murdered in this country within the past few years, and who are still unknown, while many others have been associated with the same犯人, and whose murderers have never been brought to justice because the hunting of the whole affair was essential to the preservation of some woman's good name.

It is now more than eleven years since the murder of New Haven, Conn., which were hurried one bright morning out of bed. On the streets where he was walking up by the river, he was seen by

Jesse Craven, a sixteen-year-old boy, who was then employed in the City of Elizabethtown, N. H.

His mother was alive with a young man, and this Elizabethtown man, who was a disreputable fellow, had been engaged in robbing the stores where he was working.

He was seen by the boy, and when he was walking up by
the river, he was seen by

John Williams, who was employed in the same

store, and he was seen by the boy, and he was seen