IMPROVED BUTTER.

At the request of the victualing department of the French navy for some wholesome substitute for butter that would keep well, Mege Mouriez, after a long course of experiments, has succeeded in producing an excellent substitute for genuine butter, that does not become rancid with time, and is otherwise highly recommended. Experiments made with cows, submitted to a very severe and scanty diet, led to the discovery that they continue to give milk, though in greatly diminished quantity, and that this milk always contains butter; whence it was inferred that this butter was formed from fat contained in the animal tissues, the fat undergoing conversion into butter through the influence of the milk-secreting glands. Acting on this hint, Mouriez's process begins with splitting up the animal fats. Finely divided fresh beef suet is placed in a vessel containing water, carbonate of potash, and fresh sheep's stomachs, previously cut up into small fragments.

The temperature of the mixture is then raised to about 112 degrees Fahrenheit, when, under the joint influence of the pepsin and the heat, the fat becomes separated from the cellular tissue. The fatty matter floating on the top is decanted, and after cooling submitted to a very powerful hydraulic pressure. The semi-fluid oleo-margarine is thus separated from the stearine, and becomes the basis of the butter to be afterward produced. One hundred pounds of this oleo-margarine, along with about twenty-two quarts of milk and eighteen quarts of water, are poured into a churn, and to this mixture are added a small quantity of annatto and about three ounces of the soluble matter obtained by soaking for some hours in milk cows' udders and milk glands. The mixture is then churned and the butter obtained, after being well washed with cold water and seasoned, is ready for use. If required to be kept for a long time, it is melted by a gentle heat in order to eliminate all the water.—Popular Science Monthly.

Typographical Accuracy.

Every one who has been in the habit of reading carefully the London newspapers, as well as those of our own city, cannot have failed to notice the greater typographical accuracy of the English press. This is not achieved without immense expense and labor. On the great London dailies each portion of matter passes through a number of different hands. From the "reader," generally a fairly educated man, it goes to the sub-editor's room, where it is carefully perused by a gentleman in his department. Thence it passes, if editorial matter, to the editor's room, and is carefully gone over by one of the chiefs of the editorial department. One of the principal dailies retains the services of a gentleman whose extraordinarily extensive reading and retentive memory make him invaluable in correcting inaccuracies in the way of quotation and illustration. It is his duly to read over every editorial and morsel of foreign correspondence. The editorials on the Times and Telegraph are so much altered by the editorial overseers, that, to the great annoyance of their authors, they could hardly be recognized as the original composition. "I don't quite like that," an editor will say, "see if you can give more point to the wind up of this leader." After that it will go to some one else, who will make still further alterations. But the result is a familiarity and equality of tone, which is specially observed in the London Times. The articles, although written by very different people, are so thoroughly trimmed by the same hands, that they are distinguished by the special style desired. These refinements are unknown here; and more carelessness than is exhibited by some of our best papers cannot be found, except, perhaps, in the provincial press of Ireland.—Appletons Joural.

The Greek Brigands—A Woman's Stratagem.

A story comes from Athens about Greek brigandage, very refreshing to honest people, and suggestive of the question whether women might not govern Greece better than its men. One of the curses of modern Hellas, as everybody knows, is the unextirpated guild of brigands who infest the land, defying the government, suppressing commerce, demoralizing the peasantry, and robbing and murdering strangers or rich natives. One of those unhanged villains lately captured the youthful son of a widow woman of property, well known upon the border.

The usual message was sent down from the hills: the brigand chief must have one thousand drachmas by a certain day, or the life of the boy—he was only twelve years old—would pay the forfeit. As usual too, the last hope which a mother could cherish in such a frightful position was the chance of government help. The wretchedly weak administrations which play at "in and out" in Athens still allow these scoundrels to hold the roads and passes of the country, and this poor woman had to trust to her own courage and wits. Neither were wanting; there was some true old Odyssean blood in her, and she hit upon a plan for saving both her child and her drachmas.

She had a brother, a young fellow of perfect pluck, though his cheeks were as smooth as the Delian Apollo's, and him she dressed up carefully as Greek girl. Having appointed to meet the robber chief in a certain spot, she took up two hundred drachmas, and a present of cakes and fruit, the "Greek girl" going with her as a "guide." On reaching the place they found the scoundrel waiting, with the captive lad bound hand and foot beside him. The woman first ascertained by cunning questions that the man was really alone, and then offered, with many supplications, her money, and the present of cakes and fruit. The villain took the latter and munched them while he counted out the drachmas; then, with a fierce oath he said it was far too little—that she must go back and send enough to make up a thousand, or the head of the lad would be sent down to her without delay. While the woman clung supplicating to his knees, the "Greek girl" suddenly flung a grip of iron round the robber's arms, and, as the fellow was thus pinioned, the outraged mother drew a loaded pistol and shot his head. The pair lost no time in liberating the lad, nor did they forget to cut off and wrap in a cloth the head of the "chief," and, as a reward of three thousand drachmas had been set upon this precious article, they made quite an excellent day's business of it, on arriving safe and sound at their own village.—London Telegraph.
