In a case such as is described by Mr. Nield, if the road is really necessary to the convenience of the public, the county court should take the steps prescribed by law to purchase from the settler, or have condemned, the necessary fight of way; and should then have the same laid out, recorded and established as a public highway, A petition from settlers who need such a road, addressed to the county court, would doubtless secure the necessary action on its part.

There is generally a smooth and just course to take in effecting a settlement of such difficulties as the one Mr. Nield refers to, and this is especially the case where all parties concerned are disposed to keep cool, do right and pursue a line of action consistent with law and reason.
