The kind that has made him famous in the east and forced those who were not familiar with his style of going wonder whether or not the defeat of McGovern was not more or less on the fluke order. And who can blame them. Take the showngs of the Denver chap in his fights with Boyle, Rice, Maynard, Broad and all the rest of them that he has fought since winning the championship from Terry, and even his warmest support er is forced to shake his head and bring forth all his available excuses in an effort to defend the Denverite. We out here who are thoroughly familiar with his every move do not at tach so much importance to his poor showings as do the experts of the We, here, have seen the champion fight like the veriest novice and look like thirty cents in front of a man who had not license to even box him. Then, again, as in his fights with Yanger, Santry, Broad and Bernstein, he appeared a champion every inch.

We know he can fight, and yet they won't believe it in the east. And who can blame them. Outside of the battle with McGovern our esteemed friends have only seen him at his worst. It unfortunate indeed that such should be the case, but it's the truth neverthe-less. Could they but witness one of his real battles opinion would be changed and the very same writers who are now calling him a counterfeit would be the ones to sing his praises No fault can be found with them for their opinion of Corbett. He certainly has given cause for all the condemnation that is being heaped on him. To use a sporting phrase, his showings have been simply "rotten," and the people who went to see the entertainments and paid their money ought to complain about being robbed.

If it was a true line on the merits of the champion there would be no use commenting on the fights he has made But his showings are so far from what he really can do that it's an outrag on the public, and matchmakers ough to refuse him any more contests until he places himself into condition so as to be able to give the spectators what they have paid for." Corbett has no one to blame but him self. Since defeating McGovern he has fought like a "sucker," and the cause of it all can be said in two words, 'swelled head." After he won over th champion he went to New York and tasted the sweets of hero worship to its fullest extent. Naturally it turned the boy's head. It would do the same to almost any one. to almost any one. Not one fighte out of a thousand can withstand i When Corbett realized that he really amounted to something he took himsel serious and that it what is leading to his downfall.

His downfail. He absolutely refuses to train, believ-ing that all other fighters are beneath him in skill and reputation. He goes into a ring hog-fat, his wind bad, and, in fact, he has no business there at all. What is the result? He makes a bad fight and then the people go out of the hall and say: "A stiff." and "He beat McGovern by a fluke," etc. Now let this same Young Corbett ge into condition and the would be revelation. He is fast and can hit lik a mule kicking when at his best. Take him to may 128 pounds at the ringside and the best little man of his weight in the business would appear before you the business would appear before you. Unless he will pay attention to his training, however, it will not be long before he will be relegated to the has-been division of the game, and then when walking down Broadway they won't point to him as the champion, but instead, will say, "there goes the biggest four-flusher that ever pulled on a pair of gloves."
