Pocatello, Idaho, Oct. 13.-An unpro voked attack upon George H. Lee, stone mason, early this morning, result-ed disastrously to William Apperly, the aggressor in the affray, an em-ploye of the O. S. L. shops and formerploye of the O. S. L. shops and formally of Logan.

As Lee was on his way to work this morning he was met on Center street near the L. D. S. church, by Apperly and Hyrum Burton an eughner, who were feeling the effects of early morn-ing revelry, and began an attack on Lee who was most shamefully abused. His dinner pail was kicked out of his hand, and he was knocked down and beaten. Rallying, he drew a knife and warned them to desist which was not heeded. Apperly again advanced to the attack when Lee struck him a blow with the knife that penetrated the chest cavity below the heart, which put a quietus on the aggressors.

Officer Poppelton arrived about this time and all were placed under arrest. Dr. Rooker was called to dress Apperly who was bleeding profusely, and though the wand is the wound is serious it is not thought to be fatal.

SALMON OF THE NORTH PACIFIC.

Most Mysterious Fish and Something of Its Interesting Habits

HOW CAUGHT AND CANNED

Trap Fishing the Wholesale Method b Which the Fisherman Fills His Boat at Leisure.

Special Correspondence, Seattle, Wash., Oct. 7 .- Around that lordly fish, the north Pacific salmon, which constitutes one of the principal items of the world's food supply, there is the all pervading mystery of the great north. Salmon fishermen have said, and it is generally believed, that salmon by a mysterious instinct seek the stream in which they were born and ascend it to lay their eggs and die. One authority on fish culture, however, who has not found proof of this, believes that while in the ocean the fish lieves that while in the ocean the fish do not stay far from the mouth of their native river, but when the time comes to make their journey they ascend the stream nearest to them.

Large schools of galmon have been seen in the ocean many miles from land, but always headed toward shore and fresh water. They are supposed to subsist on vegetable matter, and their span of life is reckoned by various authorities to be all the way from four to eight years. When grown they start for fresh water, traveling in such large numbers that they often choke up the numbers that they often choke up the smaller streams in their search for suitable spawning grounds. When the smaller streams in their search for suitable spawning grounds. When the female is ready to spawn she looks for a rendy or gravelly bottom in a pool or eddy two or three feet deep. She makes an excavation by plowing the sand with her nose anl scraping it out with her tail. Here Mistress Salmon deposits her eggs, and her mate fertilizes them, after which they are covered by pushing the gravel over them, thus finishing the nest. The parents remain close by, fighting off every fish that ventures to come near, until at length they become emaclated and die.

The eggs deposited in this manner are not hatched for three or four months, but early in the spring the young fry may be seen by taking up a handful of gravel from the bottom. Five months after the spawning the young fishes begin to dodge about-under stones and sticks, come to the sur-young fishes begin to dodge about under stones and sticks, come to the surface occasionally, nibble at some passing object and dart back again.

The take of north Pacific salmon last season represented 36,265,000 fish, and the pack reached the collossal figure of 126,304,000 pounds of food prepared for the table. But this year a salmon famine is feared by T. R. Kersham, the Washington state fish commissioner, who does not expect any more good runs of sockeye salmon until after large hatcheries have been built on the Fraser river. As the supply has been Fraser river. As the supply has been heavily drawn upon year after year, with no replenishment, and nature has not been assisted to make good the losses, the only way to perpetuate the supply is to keep hatching more salmon. The commissioner's views on this subject are of interest. He says:

"The present condition of the canning industry is certainly bad, but its fucite a practically parallel case, five years ago the canners on the Columbia river were 'broke.' They were in the same condition that some of the Puget sound cannery men are finding them-selves in this year. Two years later returns began to come from the work of the Chinook salmon hatcheries. Every subsequent year the run increased in volume. This increase was due to the supply turned out by hatcheries.

"Whata the hatcheries have done for the Chinook fisheries on the Columbia they can do for the sockeye fisheries of Puget sound once they are established. There is not now a single sockeye hatchery on any stream tributary to Puget sound. There are 18 hatcheries in the state. Of these three are turning out Chinook salmon and the other 15 the cheap pink fish. No red sal-mon are being artificially propagated for the sound fisheries.

"The fact that more than 300,000,000

sockeyes were taken in one year, 1901, ought to be a hint that some method of replenishment should be undertaken, particularly when you reflect on the disappointing returns of this year. As particularly when you reflect on the disappointing returns of this year. As to the efficacy of hatcheries there can be no question. In our state hatcheries we turn out 90 per cent of all the eggs we take in, while, according to scientists, but 5 per cent of the eggs are saved in the natural spawning grounds. An ordinary sockeye contains about 3,000 eggs.

"Another plan I have in mind for the replenishment of the salmon supply on Puget sound is the production on the Fraser river of the Columbia river Chinook salmon. This is a red fish of even better quality than the sockeye and four times as large. An average Chinook will weigh probably 30 pounds and a sockeye about seven or eight. We shall turn out Chinooks at the Sultan, Dungeness and White river hatcheries. at the Sultan, Dungeness and White river hatcheries; to the others we shall ship the surplus eggs from the Colum-bia river. I am confident the experi-ment will be a success,"

Salmon are caught at the mouth of streams or as they ascend them. Employes of the different companies are divided into gangs and distributed over the territory to be covered. They op-erate from stations, where there are small houses in which they live during the fishing season.

There are three principal methods of catching salmon. Gill net fishing is the most simple. Two men are assign-ed to each boat. The nets, which vary from 200 to 250 fathoms in length, are stored in the stern. One man rows while the other carefully pays out the net, which has a buoy attached to the end. The course is steered across the

For seine fishing the nets are usually much longer, generally 800 or 1,000 fathoms long. They are laid out in the same manner, but are paid out over a roller in the boat's stern, the rope having been first tied to a strong post on the beach. Then a wide circuit is made, inclosing as much water as the seine's length will allow. When the last end is landed all the men haul in, and if the catch be a good one it is heavy work. To lighten the labor some fisheries use a steam launch to tow the seine and a steam winch for hauling. To prevent the seine from snagging at seine and a steam winch for hauling. To prevent the seine from snagging at the bottom men in boats fellow along the cork line. If the catch is large when the fish are hauled in shoal water they are scooped out of the seine with huge dip nets into large boats, which take them to the canneries.

Trap fishing is the wholesale method. The traps are built by driving piles so arranged as to form a lead, which is covered by wire or cotton netting. The fish follow this run into an ingeniously arranged "pot," from which they cannot escape. The fisherman then fills his boats at leisure.

WHEN ONE IS OLD

Mattre Labori, the noted French advocate who defended the lfumberts, is not remarkable in Paris so much for the eloquence, as for the neatness and the polish of his speeches.

An American journalist heard Labori in court one day. He says the advocate's address was full of grace, wit, tenderness. He quotes a passage relating to oid age wherein Labori, with a smile, saids "Old age—we shall hone of us quite understand that until we have attained is it—for no one of us, here, is old. But the other day I visited my uncle, a very age!

What is it like, Uncle,' I said, 'to be
