exploded—and then the fire department was called out; the entire apparatus from station No. 1 responding. The trouble turned out to be an ex-plosion of gas in a whisky barrel, and was caused in a rather peculiar way. A clerk in the wholesale department of the establishment was in the act of ex-emining a number of barrels and was amining a number of barrels and was holding a lighted match at the bottom of them when suddenly there was a loud report, a crash of falling glass and plaster and people began to rush into the building. It appears that the bung had been knocked out of the barrel and when the match was thrust near the hole the gas exploded. The top of the barrel went crashing through the cell-ing and in an instant the place was filled with smoke. Several bottles were broken and glass fell all over the floor

Fortunately no one was hurt. Some one turned in an alarm, but a mistake was made in stating that the fire was on Third South. The mistake was on Third South. The mistake was rectified before the apparatus got away, however, and but little time was lost, BURGLARS AT BINGHAM.

Break Into a Store and Make Off With $500 Worth of Jewelry.

(Special to the "News.")

Bingham, Sept. 4 .- Some time between 10 and 11 o'clock last night the Booth Mercantile company's place of business was entered by burglars and between $500 and $600 worth of jewerry taken. The culprits gained en-trance by cutting out a door panel, and once in they helped themselves to the most valuable articles they could find. A similar trick was played at Jerome Bourgard's saloon shortly after, but at this place the burglars got nothing. There is no clue to the guilty parties and little hope of ever catching them as the town is crowded with an undesirable class of men who have flocked here in great numbers to get work on the many projects at present under way in this vicinity.

FOREMAN KELLY'S STORY.

James Kelly, foreman at the slaughter house, gave the following account of the accident:

"There must have been six boys in the crowd which came up to the slaughter house about 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon. We were killing pigs at the time and always have trouble in keeping boys out of the place, in fact we throw water and all kinds of things at them when they come in the door, but there is no keeping them out.

"We were all busy getting ready to knock down the pigs when the boys arrived. The first thing I know about the accident was when I heard the boy scream. In order to explain the situation, the pigs are driven on to an elevated platform just above the scalding vat, which rests about four feet above the floor. At this side there are some steps leading up to the platform, the top steps being flush with the top of the vat. No one seems to know how it happened, for we were all busy with the pigs, but the boy must have stepped or been pushed off the steps.

"As soon as I heard his scream I yelled to Smith (one of the employes) to pull his clothes off him, for in the meantime the boy had been helped out by his brother and companions. Smith started doing this and I went on the run for some linseed oil. We took all his clothes off and soaked him thoroughly with the oil and then I wrapped him in a sheet and blanket, put him in my buggy and hurried him home.

"I was thunderstruck when a telephone message informed me this morning that the little fellow was dead. Ail the time I was taking him home he did not complain of pain. He said he was tingling a little! He never cried a bit, what pain he had he kept to himself, in fact he laughed and joked with his brother who sat behind.

The boy was scalded pretty badly on the left calf, while his arms peeled in places from the shoulders down. He could not have been in the water more than a second before he screamed and was helped out."

Kelly while relating the incident was much affected and made the remark that he bet he would not have a boy around the place after this.

THE FATHER'S MISFORTUNE.

"Ed" Stokes, the father of the boy, is an old employe of the drug company, and some three years ago lost a leg in a streetcar accident on the Rapid Transit on Seventh South.
