The Strange Ups and Downs of a Minister in California.

A FARMER'S HORRIBLE DEATH.

Mother and Child Fatally Burned.—A Convict's Futile.—Supposed Suicide.

Fort Collins, Colo., has only 2 per cent of its tax levy uncollected this year.

In Baca county, in the southeastern corner of Colorado, farmers are putting in grain all through the winter.

In the San Luis valley, Colo., the mercury in the thermometers runs up to 100 degrees in the sun almost daily.

Navajo Indians are selling their surplus sheep at the Cuero trading post at $1.25 a head for the Durango market.

At Grand Junction, Colo., the sewage well developments have been suspended until new casing arrives for piping the gas.

Trinidad, Colo., announces the arrival there of 1,100 live rabbits from Texas on the way to the Denver market.

The relic hunters who went from Farmington, N. M., to the cave dwellers' ruins at Chaco, failed to obtain what they went after.

San Luis valley, Colo., farmers assert they can afford to raise pork and sell cured meat at 12 cents a pound. Now is the time to start in.

Wyoming settlers are protesting vigorously against the nomadic sheep men who destroy the ranges and injure settlers, make no homes and pay no taxes.

Kit Carson county, Colo., invites the starving people of the east to come to its rich and uncrowded soil. Thousands of acres of rich land is still unclaimed in that county.

Nebraska Independents have put a boycott on the Lincoln hotel at Lincoln because of its recent connection with the Republicans in the McKeighan case.

Richardson county, Neb., farmers will plant large crops of sorghum next year to stock feeding. They can raise two crops from the same ground in one season.

Orders have been made for special engineering surveys to the town of Burns and Cuiler, Colo. Lewis was granted the supplemental petition in the annexation of North Denver and Harman.

Near Sterling, Logan County, Colo., an irrigating ditch five miles long is being constructed from the Platte river to the Power & Milton ranch, part title. It is to be finished by March 15.

Akron, Colo., fruit growers report the prospect of apples next season as very good. Apples, plums and pears grown on the volcanic ash rings will be a curiosity of the nineteenth century.

At Alamosa, Colo., the grain elevators are filled to the roofs. The flour mill there has 250,000 bushels on hand and two run night and day all winter. From two to four cars of wheat are shipped from Alamosa daily.

On Wednesday evening a lamp explosion at the Dewire residence at Aspen, Colo., and highfidelity burned Mrs. Dewire and infant, a four-year-old child. Both are reported to be in a dying condition.

The two-year old son of C. H. Keys of Leadville, Colo., was playing under a sled in front of his father's house and in some manner knocked down the block that held the sled in place. The board caught the little fellow's neck and injured him to death.

Charles Howell, a miner in the Evangeline at Leadville, Colo., had a narrow escape from death in the cabin on Wednesday night. He was thawing out some cans, when the shot exploded, throwing him violently to the ground, badly cutting his head. He will recover.

J. E. Hennessy, one of the leading merchants in Northern Colorado and prominent in the Odd Fellow fraternity, was found dead in bed in his home at Ault. A bottle containing morphine was found in his pocket. He left a note to the inquest, indicating that his death was premeditated. He was insured for $14,000.

The Los Angeles Times furnishes the following as an indication of the progress of Arizona: "Arizona is becoming an agricultural country of no mean importance, as astonishing to citizens who reside in the territory twenty years ago. The latest news in connection with the boom is a county of 200 inhabitants near Yuma who are making use of irrigating ditches."

On Wednesday night three men, armed with revolvers and knives, entered the cabin of a man named "French," a trapper in Routt's county, adjoining Hahn City, Idaho, and held him up and robbed him of $100 in money, a gold watch and chain, a Winchester rifle and a shotgun and marched him up the hill, threatening to kill him. They then went off down the river.

Frank Albright, the man who was recently beat up by the officers at Colorado Springs, has positively identified two of the assailants and has suspects of two others. The last two blowers and hold-ups, who worked Pueblo Saturday night and were arrested at Salida, were one of them in the county jail Tuesday. He says he is sure of two, and Marshal Dana saw all of them in Colorado City the night before the hold-up.

John Winter, a convict at the Colorado state penitentiary, is very sorry he stole a bicycle in October, 1892, and writes the board of pardons to that effect. He has made every reparation in his power, he says, having sold his wheel and chain to reimburse the man to whom the wheel is, he has served one half of his two year term and would like to get out. If he should be solemnly promised to go back to his parents' home in Kansas and "live an honest and consistent life the remainder of his days." He says that since serving at Canon he has been troubled with his old gangrene stomach and "screaming pains" in the head, and fears he may die. Secretary Gaines has written for more particulars.

Henry Hamilton, a wealthy farmer of Stockton county, Colo., was shockingly mangled Monday by being run over by a cultivator drawn by six unbroken mules. The off side of his head was crushed, the base passing into the brain. His right arm was broken and above the wrist, and his left hand was so badly crushed it required some fastening to bring the parts together. In addition to the frightful injuries he was badly bruised and cut in several places. The surgeon in charge of the hospital at that place found two bones sprung, one called the skull on the left side, where there was a loss of substance on the brain. Pieces of bone had been driven into the brain and these were carefully removed, leaving an opening in front of the head. Hamilton has since died.

Rev. J. H. W. Haven is a minister who has been struggling against fate, says the San Francisco Chronicle. For years he has been engaged in various kinds of business, but so much seemed to strike him. Then he went into the watch and jewelry business, but failed and quit his task, and after a time came as a streetcar conductor. He proved a good worker. At Golden Gate, after a spirited contest with some opposing ministers, he succeeded in being appointed chaplain of the Lakeside. Soon he tried to make a career at preaching. At last his congregation commenced to drop off one by one and finally the opposing church went to mass bars entirely for the minister to get along. His salary dropped to one-half and then one-fifth and he had to go out and hustle at another business. A short time ago he turned up in Utah and has connected a series of meetings at the corner of Second and Market streets. He made a plea for the laborer and did a great deal of work among the poor. Then he became master of a hard times department and distributed articles among the needy. At last he was caught by hard times himself, and was now held responsible in insolvency in the superior court. Harris says his liabilities will amount to about $5,000 and he has no assets.
