THE EVENING NEWS.

Tuesday. . . March 25, 1873.

A Love Affair.

Miss Midy Morgan, who has become widely and prominently known as one of the best live stock reporters of the present day, writes as follows from the Times office, New York, under date of February 29, to the secretary of the Colorado stock-growers' association:

"In the latter days of April, or early the following month, I hope to be at St. Louis, Mo., when I would gladly run up to Denver, procure myself the honor of an acquaintance with the stock men of Colorado, and have a small talk about the prospects of this industry in the West. Raising stock is a subject full of interest to me, and I have carefully studied, now for nearly four years, the requirements of the Eastern markets, as well as the difficulties and obstacles that beset the way of producers of beef, mutton and pork.

I am most anxious to become a western land owner, but I fear to do so until I can perceive a rent in the clouds that now overshadow the cattle trade. Etc., etc."

I read the above extract from the Denver Daily News, in a store at Las Animas, to a number of leading stock men—all bachelors—and, they were very attentive to the reading of it, and grinned and blushed and seemed perfectly delighted. Then came the comments.

"If," said one, "that Midy Morgan is only kind of pretty, girlish, you know, coquettish-like, lovely, dashing, sort of modest and tender-looking, with her lively interest in stock matters and her intelligent views of the situation, hang me, if I wouldn't rather see her—the fairy Queen of the Stock Market—than any queen that ever sat upon a throne!"

"Fudge!" said another, "all but the girlish! I'll bet you a new hat that she is an old maid, with lots of crows feet about her eyes. I'll bet you another new hat that, instead of being a fairy-like creature, she has a big broad foot and weighs one hundred and fifty pounds. This is one of the strong minded sisters—you may go your bottom dollar on that; a masculine head and brains on tapering shoulders. Midy wouldn't be writing live stock articles for the New York Times for a living if she was pretty; some enterprising chap that wants a wife who has the rare combination of feminine beauty and masculine sense would have gobbled her up long ago. No use talking, Gam, if it is a pleasure to you to conceive of Midy—the Queen of the stock market—as a fair girlish creature, I advise you to avoid seeing either herself or her picture."

"I don't care a snap," chimed in another bach, "whether Midy is pretty or not; I'd marry her, if I had the chance, at the drop of the hat, just for the sake of having a woman to whom 'the raising of stock is a subject full of interest,' and who has 'carefully studied the requirements of the Eastern market.' We'd have many a lively chat, you bet. I'd oppose her, you know—take the opposite side; I'd argue in favor of the long-horned Texas against the short-horned Durham; I'd oppose the notion that Western stock men are 'fleeced' by Eastern stock men. I'd let her know they weren't sharp enough for that; that Western men could trade them blind, and get the advantage of them in every department of the stock business—buying, selling or shipping. I'd get Midy mad—make the hot blood mount to her cheeks and the fire flash from her eyes; in fact, I'd make her do as I've made many a homely woman do—talk herself pretty. And then, you know, I'd like to have Midy for a partner in the stock business. She could lift an obscure Colorado stock man right up into the thrilling atmosphere of wealth and fame. If I thought that I could get her—that she'd have me—though she be as strong-minded and as homely as Cady Stanton, I'd go for her. I'd leave no stone unturned. I wouldn't rest until she was mine and I was hers, and we were partners in the stock business."

"Guess you'll have no trouble about that," said one of the former speakers. Doesn't Midy say she "is most anxious to become a western land owner? And you've got more land than any of us; you've cabbaged a small sized land grant down there on the lower Arkansas, and all you've got to do is to let Midy know that, if she owns you she'll be the owner of a Western land grant and one of the finest looking stock men in Southern Colorado. Fair sailing, Bill, go right in and win."

"But how'll a fellow set about it?"

"That's easy enough. There's A. Bach—he's a poet, you know. Get him to write some touching lines to Midy for you; that'll give the thing an air of refinement—a sort of literary polish; mix business with sentiment, old fellow, if you would carry your point with such a girl, or old maid, as the case may be, as Midy Morgan."

"How about that, Bach? won't you grind me out a few rhymes to send to Midy?"

"Certainly. Here goes:"

LINES TO MISS MIDY MORGAN.

BY WILLIAM I. WEBSTER.

I'm a western stock man, aged thirty years;
Own a little land grant, and lots of Texas steers.
All I lack's a partner, and from what I see,
You're a live stock woman—and you're the girl for me.

My cabin's by the river—no other cabin's near;
A romantic desolation only lacking woman's cheer;
I've a rough-and-ready table—a three-legged stool—
A coffee-pot and skillet, and am living like a fool!

When I lay me down to sleep, the coyotes wildly bark;
I'm wakened in the morning by the tuneful meadow lark;
I rise to see the antelope with their tails so white,
And a monster herd of buffalo—what a splendid sight!

As you're fond of stock, Mid, come and live with me;
A woman in this wildness—how charming it would be!
Pleasure is in contrast—true, Midy, as the Book;
In contrast with the buffalo how pleasant you would look!

Then leave the crowded city for the roomy Plains;
Lay aside your stock pen and rest your busy brains;
Come and see my land grant and my "precious dears—"
I mean my gay and lively herds of long-horned Texas steers.

I'll furnish you a "broncho" to "round up" stock with me;
To "herd" with Midy Morgan—how pleasant it would be!
I'll train you, dear, to lasso a brawling Texas steer,
And make the savage creature walk off upon his ear.

And you shall help me brand them, that's so funny, too,
To have a long-horned Texas a-chasing after you;
We'll drive the cattle in the "shute"—Oh, it will be so grand!
I'll hold and twist the Texas tail, and Midy, you may brand.

Now though I've got a land grant, and many a Texas steer,
One thing you know, is lacking yet, and that's a "precious dear,"
And you're the one I'm after—the subject of these rhymes—
Charming Midy Morgan, of the New York Daily Times.

After I had finished the reading of the above effusion, there were many expressions of enthusiasm and delight, only a few of which I remember, such as "that's splendid, Bach," "that'll fetch her down from the New York Times like a shot," "sure as you're born Bill you'll soon have a woman on your hands—a partner in the stock business," "that poetical lasso will fetch her the first throw, right around the neck—going to send it, aint you Bill?"

"You bet your life I'll send it."

"That's business."

I am sure if Miss Morgan wants to marry, she could not do better than accept the suit of my friend, Mr. Webster. His soft brown hair lies loosely but gracefully every which way. He is tall, finely formed, and as straight as an arrow. His face is sun browned, and tinged with a deep rich poppy red, and his large black eyes are eloquent of love, and a lively interest in the stock business. He dresses splendidly—a fine business suit, a jocky cap, a gold watch chain, two or three nicely tucked in his bosom, heavy spurs, a sweeping mustache, and the handsomest long-stemmed meerschaum I ever saw. He has rich eastern parents, is a graduate of Yale, very interesting in conversation, loves stock, is attentive to business, and drives a splendid team. I think my friend Bill Webster is in every way worthy of an alliance or partnership with Midy Morgan, the Queen of the Stock Market, and shall wait the result of his suit, with a great deal of anxiety.
