

FINE CAMP FIRE IN ARMORY HALL

Despite Storm and Darkness,
Program Was Well
Carried Out.

FINE MUSIC, GOOD SPEECHES

Average Age of Union Soldier in '61
Was 19 Years—What the Flag Stands For.

The Armory hall campfire was fairly well attended and the decorations were of a fine and well arranged, a feature being little banners along the walls bearing the names of the states. Judge J. W. O'Neill of Lebanon, Ohio, presided. The meeting was disturbed during the early part by the heavy thunder shower, and the rain blew into the room furiously until the windows were shut, whereupon the lights fluttered, spluttered, flickered and finally went out, leaving the place in darkness for some 45 minutes. However, the exercises went on just the same.

The Hawaiian Troubadours and the Modoc club of Kansas furnished excellent instrumental and vocal music, the visiting organization making an excellent impression. The singers had recently arrived and were tired out, but they sang well, and are good fellows. Their pianist was "strictly on to his job."

Speeches were made by the chairman, W. S. Weatherbee of Boston, Mrs. Genevieve Land, president of the W. R. C. of Chicago, and Past Commanders-in-Chief, E. G. Torrance of Minneapolis and Charles G. Burton of Missouri. These all made telling addresses, while Mrs. Ruth Fox gave two well received dramatic readings.

Judge O'Neill said there was not one member of the Grand Army who was not glad he had lived in the times of '61 and been able to serve his country, even at the great risk and hardships encountered. "The old soldiers had lived to more than ever realize that the cause for which they suffered had proved just."

WHAT THE FLAG STANDS FOR.

Mr. Weatherbee explained that the average age of the Union soldier in 1861 was but 19. If it had not been for the G. A. R. Cuba would not now be free, and Japan and Russia might still be fighting. The flag they fought for stands for liberty. It waves over a free and united country. It is the flag of the world today. The millions of dollars it cost are insignificant to the loss of human blood. Four hundred thousand died and as many were crippled, but the flag today is one to be proud of and brag about. Above all it cemented the north and south.

THE LADIES' TRIBUTE.

Mrs. Lane said in part: "We have love, respect and honor for the G. A. R. that lives in the hearts of all true Americans today. We, the Ladies of the G. A. R., are here to greet the veterans, and we are allied with an organization second to none in the world. We know that no member of the G. A. R. has a place in his heart for anarchy, for hate or disobedience of law. History can never forget you. Your mission on earth is replete with noble success, and may your reward in heaven be as your deeds deserve."

Past Commander Torrance said: "I thank God that we are here today under the same flag, the flag of Washington and Lincoln. The Stars and Stripes are silent, but nothing in the world is so beautiful. It is a beautiful picture to remember, the picture of the young men defending their country. No artist can paint the picture whose chief beauty lives today and will live forever in the homes in these United States."

GEN. BURTON'S ADDRESS.

Past Commander Burton made a fine address. He had to get off a bit on the chairmen, as follows: "Commander O'Neill had been asked in Sabath school for the definition of a lie," the speaker went on. "His reply was: 'A lie is an abomination in the sight of the Lord, but an ever-present help in time of trouble.' Not that I can accuse him now of its use in his flattering introduction for you know we of the G. A. R. are proud of our organization. The Grand Army of the Republic has three virtues. It stands for fraternity, for charity and for loyalty. By fraternity we mean brotherly love, not confined to our order, but to the public. There are times when we demand this principle. We have demanded a government of, for and by the people, and thank God the demand has never been refused."

"By loyalty we mean devotion to the government, to the republic, to the Stars and Stripes and to the principles contained in the folds of the flag. The G. A. R. is no order of nobility. The Constitution of the United States wisely provides that there shall be no such orders, but we wear on our caps an emblem richer than any order of nobility. It is the little button with the star and eagle made from cannon captured on the field of battle. It can't be bought and it can't be sold."

At 9:30, at one blast of the Tribune whistle, the various commands will start for their place of rendezvous, which will be designated on a map furnished each department commander. At two whistles the column will form. At three whistles the column will move.

The column will enter Main street from east South Temple and march to the living flag at Seventh South and Main streets on the east side, and passing the flag the width of Main street, 132 feet, will return on the west side of Main street and be reviewed by the commander-in-chief at Main and South Temple.

When the department of Utah has passed the reviewing stand, the Grand Army parade will be completed.

The commander-in-chief will review the bands and living flag immediately after.

When Utah has passed Main and First South the bands which have already passed in review will have counter-marched to that point and will fall in the rear of Utah.

When Utah has passed the living flag the latter will form in the rear of Utah and will halt at Main and First South long enough for the bands to swing into line in the rear of Utah.

The living flag will form in the rear of the bands and both pass the reviewing stand, the band playing and the children singing "Onward, Christian Soldiers."

The Sons of Veterans will bring up the rear, carrying the great flag of Fort Douglas.

The Sons of Veterans and the Spanish American war veterans will act as guides to the various departments, before, during and after the parade through the week of the encampment, and will call to their aid such other aid as assistance as they deem expedient.

The "flower shower" of veterans will take place just as soon as the parade starts. There will be 15 on the girls in charge of Mrs. O. W. McGill and when the veterans pass they will shower them with bouquets. The girls will stand near the reviewing stand at the head of Main street and shower flowers upon the old soldiers as they pass in parade.

ATTENTION!

Hats off!

Cheers for the veterans as they pass in imposing parade!

Wherever you meet them show them consideration, give them a pleasant greeting, bid them welcome; let each little act be fraught with sentiment as gracious as the pinning of a rose on the lapel.

For these old soldiers were the youths of the early sixties who defended the integrity of the Nation; who endured privation; who were often ill through exposure and hunger; who were sometimes wounded, while some suffered the horrors of captivity—the flower of the army—those gallant young fellows who cheered as they stormed; who shot as they charged!

Around the camp fires these stirring scenes will be narrated, old memories revived, old friendships renewed.

The thrill of turbulent times will stir again the hearts of the brave old heroes!

Let them enjoy themselves to their full, for the ranks are thinning fast, for the touch of passing years is telling on them.

To the relentless sweep of the grim Reaper they are annually falling in larger numbers than men fell before the carnage at Antietam.

A score of years and we will know them only in memory.
