NOTICE

THE indefatigable, irrepressible George Francis Train takes no pains to conceal whatever favorable impressions he has concerning the people of Utah, and he is evidently willing to let the world know that he has been here and that he has his own views upon the Utah ques-next day, and seeeing the article, addressed the editor the following correction, which appeared in the Prototype of the 10th:

"To the Editor of the Prototype. On Pullman Car, passing through London from San Francisco to Newport, R. I.,

Sept. 8, 1839. Sir. - May I correct a mistake? Have just left Utah, where I lectured twice in Salt Lake City. Mormonism never was so strong. The Smiths have not left a ripple on the ocean of Mormon life. The Gentiles are all being driven out by Brigham's co-operative movement. The Pacific Railroad has left the Mormons more secluded and powerful than before.

fairness and pluck. Hundreds have been here who know that such assertions as tradicted, than to have the slightest suspicion cling to them of sympathy with the people of Utah.

It is fortunate for us that we do not grave outside sympathy or aid; the rough schooling we have had has taught us to this instance of Mr. Train's, where a man does not stop to debate what effect the speaking of a favorable word about the people of Utah, though that word be the simple truth, may have upon his popularity with the world. Such instances of moral courage are exceedingly rare, and when they are exhibited, there are no people who can better appreciate them than the Latter-day Saints. Mr. Train deserves to be President, and if he dough-faces; but they have a hearty ad-

The industrious Arabs revived those useful arts which the barbarians of Eutopo seemed auxious to forget. They wove the richest fabrics of wool, cotton or silk; they manufactured cloth of gold and carpets of unequaled splendor, their divans were covered with satin, cushions and velvet hangings; and muslins, and lace of fairy-like texture adorned the Moslem bride. In metals the Arabs were also excellent workmen. They forged buge chains and bars of iron; the teel of Damascus was renowned in the cities of Europe. Their jewelry was the fairest and costliest of the age; they lavmosques and their palaces; and their mints produced a coinage that was the model of the European world. As architects they invented a strangely graceful style of building, in which the fancy of the artist seemed to revel on new creations, and of which the lovely ruins of the Alhambra form a living example; in their private houses they gathered the richest marbles, the costliest mosaics, fountains of dancing waters, and gardens of perpetual beauty.

The Arab workman was usually temperate almost to austerity. Mohammed had enforced the doctrine of total absti-nence with a rigor unsurpassed by the most austere of modern reformers. He most austers of modern reformers. He pronounced temporal and eternal woes against the Mussulman who should touch the accursed wine. He had himself set an example of perfect abstinence, and in their purer age his followers obeyed the precept of their prophet. It was only in the decline of the nation that the Mohammedans learned to imitate the drunkenness and license of the Europeaus.
