AUNT MEG'S COLUMN.

"Harry, I can warm up your cane in three minutes," said Lancaster. "The fact is—and you cannot deny it—you're in love."

Ellington started. "How on earth did you find that out?" he muttered.

"Experience and common observation," replied Lancaster shortly. "By the bye, I replied Lancaster shortly. "By the bye, I saw Milly Richmond today." Then, with an air of supreme indifference, "I thought I wasn't far out.

"Yes," groaned Ellington, "but when you've had only a paltry $1,200 a year to live on and are preparing to a lady who is—who is not, you know, quite so—so—well, you know, you're not quite sure how she'll take it."

"Formerly I should try my luck," said Lancaster, "but now, you know, I'm married. Say you decide to—to—but how shall I put it?—to ask her whether she will accept you on the understanding that you are to live in a cottage on the outskirts of Kensington, and be content with a—a—a girl who cannot match any carriage and be happy on the smiles of one doesn't deserve a husband at all.

It was all over. The last slipper had gone in unison in the air and disappeared through the window of the compartment which had the honor of accommodating the happy couple, and the last handful of rice by whitening the platform like a miniature fall of snow.

"I'm so glad it's all over at last," sighed Mildred Ellington as she threw herself wearily back among the cushions. But the whole affair was a complete success and went off without a flaw."

"Yes, darling, quite complete, except for the absence from the ceremony of one to whom I owe a great deal of my present happiness—in fact, one of your sister compilers in the field of literature, Milly. I've a confession to make. I know you'll think I'm an ungrateful, and perhaps to some, hard-hearted, Milly, beforehand that you will forgive me."

"I'd promise you anything, Harry. It—it can't be anything dreadful, I'm sure," faltering.

"Then read that and put me out of my misery."

And taking from his inside breast pocket a copy of The Daisy containing Aunt Meg's advice, which he had so successfully acted upon, he opened it at the fatal page and handed it to her.

"Harry," she said quietly, pushing it away, her eyes filling with tears the while, "I—I know what you mean now. She—she was there, and—and you saw her."

"I saw her, Milly!" ejaculated Ellington, wholly taken aback by her answer.

"You, Harry, and you saw her now? I—I see Aunt Meg at the time, and know—but without your question concerned replied accordingly. I see, meant to confess all other, and you have made it easier for me to do so. Nine me, Harry, and say you forgive me."—Exchange.

HAVE YOU THE TIME?

THE ODDS ARE TWENTY TO ONE THAT YOU HAVE NOT.

Some of the Reasons Why Most Timepieces Are Always More or Less Out of the Way—How Correct Time Is Received Daily From Washington.

Ninety-nine men out of a hundred keep incorrect time. Ninety-nine men out of a hundred are just in the act of regulating their watches in front of a window that has a chronometer in it. If you ask a man the time, and his watch is wrong, he is invariably going to the watchmaker that very day to have it put in order. No one has any idea of keeping the correct time. All believe that they have it in their pockets, and none ever gets it except at the moment of setting his watch.

If you have a friend in the railroad business and stop him in the street with a friendly "Hello, old fellow, what's the time? You always have it correct," he will haul out his timepiece with an important air and give the hour in a voice that shows he knows what time it is and that he is never wrong. A square or two farther on you chance to meet another friend in the same line of business. You ask him the time, receive an answer, smile to yourself and pass on. There was ten minutes' difference between them. Every time the statehouse bell strikes a hundred noon pull out their watches with a confident air of being correct and put them back with an expression of extreme surprise. We all live, flourish and die in time, but no one keeps the correct immediate record of the moments that best out slowly and surely the limit of longevity.

An experienced jeweler and watchmaker, when asked the reason why so few people kept good time, said that nine-tenths of the causes of bad running watches was due to carelessness and irregularity in winding. A watch should be wound at the same time every day, and it ought to be regulated on one day every week at the noon hour, when both hands come together. The finest watches cannot be made perfect, and the best way to detect any difference between the two hands is to reset them at 12 o'clock, and if they are not exactly together they may be made by holding the longer and winding the hour hand up to it.

An expensive jeweled watch ranging from $500 to $1,000 is very seldom in good running order simply because the owner is afraid to let a jeweler tamper with it and does not dare touch it himself.

In a large city correct time, absolutely correct time, is a matter between some dozen or two of men who follow almost every stroke of the pendulum and correct their chronometers with as much daily regularity as Captain Cuttle did his famous timepiece. Women are said to be the most careless in the attention to watches. A lady has a watch presented to her by a gentleman friend and voluntarily promises to keep it to the very best running order. The gentleman friend has his misgivings on that score, but he gets the jeweler to put it in good shape a couple of weeks ahead and thereupon hands it over to the lady. Now, that watch has been running like a chronometer until the fair owner gets hold of it. The first thing she does is to notice the time by a clock in the window. If her watch does not agree with it she sets it accordingly, putting the regulator away over to one side. That night she forgets to wind it up, the next morning she winds it up only half way for fear of breaking the main spring and sets it by another clock in the afternoon. Then it runs down inside of eight hours, and she thinks it is running wild—as it very likely is, since she has put the regulating lever back and forth no less than six times in the course of a week. After this she wonders why the watch is always wrong and blames the jeweler.

Correct time comes into Philadelphia every day at noon by telegraph from the United States time observatory at Washington, where the "drop ball" makes an electric contact that sends the signal all over the country. The first clock in the city communicating with the observatory wire is at the Maritime Exchange. At 56 minutes after 11 the hands of the clock automatically clerk into place by the action of the magnet and the little train of wheels attached to it. Thus the Washington time ball becomes at once the authority for all clocks and an infallible adjuster. The statehouse clock is wound and regulated weekly by an expert chronometer maker, who sets his own watch by Washington communication, and carries it immediately to Independence hall. Many large manufacturers and business places where it is necessary on account of the number of men employed to have strictly conscientious time employ a man to wind, keep in order and regulate their clocks the year round. Clocks kept closely to the mark in this way are very seldom in need of extensive repairs, and like intelligently regulated watches have less tendency to go wrong.

The Washington observatory clock runs for years together and has never varied more than six seconds for any one year.

It is kept true by continual quadrant observations on the altitude of the sun at its meridian. As the earth's revolutions become slower only by the fraction of a second in a thousand years it may be said that we are unable to take advantage of the natural means afforded for absolute time regulation in spite of the care that has been exercised in the making of timepieces. For 26,000 years, since the first recorded mention of any instrument to measure time, in Isaiah xxxviii, 8, men have been at work constructing appliances of all descriptions, all of them more or less faulty, to tell them when to eat, sleep and get up again. Is there no one to invent a fin de siecle watch that shall be able to keep up with the earth in point of exactitude?—Philadelphia Times.

Will Hardly Be Popular.

A Yankee, probably a Maine man, has invented a doorknob that renders a latchkey superfluous. It is stated that the handlenuts of the lock are so arranged as to get 100,000 combinations, by rotating the knob about its axis to each of five angular positions, which are determined by the sides of the hexagon assuming the vertical. There is much more to the description, but enough has been quoted to indicate that a sneakthief trying to use the combination would be found asleep on the doorstep and standing on his head.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Just Like a Woman.

A young and well dressed woman entered Charing Cross telegraph office the other day and wrote out a dispatch to be sent to Manchester. She read it over, reflected for a moment, and then dropped it on the floor and wrote a second. This she also threw away, but was satisfied with the third and sent it off. The three telegrams read:

First.—"Never let me hear from you again."

Second.—"No one expects you to return."

Third.—"Come home, dearest. All is forgiven."—Pearson's Weekly.

Realism.

"This picture belongs to the realistic school."

"Ah!"

"Yes. Notice that atmosphere? It is supplied by an air pump in the basement."—Detroit Tribune.
