EVENING NEWS.

Feb. 27, 1892.

JOEL.

A STORY OF DUTY.

In the middle of a dark night Joel, a boy of nine years old, heard his name called by a voice which, through his sleep, he knew to be his mother's. He had been tired enough when he went to bed, and yet he had not gone to sleep for some time; his heart beat so at the idea of his mother being very ill. He well remembered his father's death, and the mother, whose now revived some feelings which he had almost forgotten. His bed was merely some clothes spread on the floor, and he crept with a rug; but he did not mind that, and he could have gone to sleep once, but for the fact that he had heard his mother's name.

In a minute Joel was up and wide awake. "Light the candle," he could just hear the voice say, and his beating heart seemed to stop when he saw his mother's face. He seemed hardly to know whether it was his mother or no.

"Shall I call?"

"No, my dear. Come here."

He laid his cheek to hers.

"Mother, you are dying," he murmured.

"Yes, love, I am dying. It is no use calling any one. These little ones, 'You, my child! How should that be?' 'Why not?' said the boy, raising himself, and standing at his best advantage. 'Look at my mother! I can work myself, I promise you.' 'Your mother could not lift her hand, but she moved a finger in a way which checked him.

"'Promise nothing that may be too heavy for you to keep,' he said, 'that little sister shall live at home, and I will look after her. I can work myself, I promise you.' 'Your mother could not lift her hand, but she moved a finger in a way which checked him.

"'I would not do. The sense of their desolation, and the thought of a way too terrible to be borne. He hid his face beside her, murmuring, 'O, mother, I will do anything you wish!'

"His mother found strength to move her hand now. She stroked his head with a trembling touch, which he knew to be his mother's. He could not say much more. She told him to go to bed, and he went. They would be taken care of. She advised him not to wake the little ones, who were sound asleep on the other side of the door. He went to bed himself, but he did not sleep. The candle was very low; but before it went out, she was gone. Joel had always done what his mother had wished, but he could not obey her in the last thing she said. He lighted another candle when the first went out, and sat thinking, till the gray dawn began to show through the window.

When he called the neighbors, they were astonished at his quietness. He had taken up the children and dressed them, and made the room tidy, and lighted the fire, before he told anybody what had happened. And when he opened the door, his little sister was in his arms. She was two years old, and could walk, of course; but she liked being in Joel's arms. Poor little sister, she was the most confounded, he stood with his placid face at his mother's side, staring at the bed, and wondering that his mother lay so still.

If the neighbors were astonished at Joel's quietness, they were more so at some things he said afterward; but they were not. Everything seemed done as naturally as if the boy had been a man. He had to do so much a matter of course that less sensation was excited than about many smaller things.

After the funeral was over Joel tied up all his mother's clothes. He carried them to his room, and he hid his sister on the other. He would not have liked to take money for what he had done, but he had to do so much a matter of course that less sensation was excited than about many smaller things.

THE LIVER AND ITS FUNCTIONS.

IT has become a well established fact that the liver is subject to disease in the first place from indigestion, and in the second place from the use of alcohol, and in the third place from the use of drugs. The liver is the largest organ in the body, and it is the most important. It is the seat of the bile, and it is the seat of the blood. It is the seat of the life, and it is the seat of the death. It is the seat of the joy, and it is the seat of the sorrow. It is the seat of the love, and it is the seat of the hate. It is the seat of the hope, and it is the seat of the despair. It is the seat of the faith, and it is the seat of the unbelief. It is the seat of the courage, and it is the seat of the cowardice. It is the seat of the strength, and it is the seat of the weakness. It is the seat of the wisdom, and it is the seat of the folly. It is the seat of the virtue, and it is the seat of the vice. It is the seat of the good, and it is the seat of the evil. It is the seat of the light, and it is the seat of the darkness. It is the seat of the life, and it is the seat of the death.
