CONGRESSIONAL.

HOUSE.

WASHINGTON, 28.—Durham spoke against the reduction of the pay of cadets.

The question was taken on Hale's amendment and was rejected, 68 to 69.

Cox complained that members of the republican side of the House were obstructing the reform.

He had an order from Gen. Townsend, signed by order of the Secretary of War, in which he read that "no officer either active or retired shall directly or indirectly without being called upon by proper authority suggest or recommend any action to any member of Congress in connection with military business."

He inferred that the gentlemen from Maine and Illinois, Hale and Harburt, had had the advantage of some suggestions from officers, from professors at West Point, or perhaps from Gen. Townsend. This very curious order of General Townsend contained also this sentence, "The foregoing is not intended to prevent officers from illustrating measures before Congress which have received the sanction or favor of the President, the Secretary of War, or the General of the army."

Hale said—"I do not propose to take any lessons in economy from the gentleman from New York."

Hale impugned Cox's record record retrospective and prospective, as to voting in favor of retrenchment; he dared not vote only as his masters bid him.

Cox, in reply to Hale, said—"The gentleman cannot find any wrong in my record, but he can find a retrenchment or prodigality, to justify him in saying I have any masters except the people my constituents. What did he mean by 'my masters?' On what meat does this Cox feed? He has grown so great as to talk that way to me."

Hale—"Does the gentleman want me to answer?"

Cox—"Yes, and promptly."

Hale—"I mean the leading dominating influence of the party, of which the gentleman is an active and honored member. Influence, which he will be bound to follow, and so far as I may say, without being offensive, to obey."

Cox—"That belongs to the future. The gentleman, Hale, has been known in the last three or four congresses as 'Blaine's little cub.'"

Garfield rose and pointed out, but Hale got in, in superior and confusion, his retort in these words, "I will put my name against the suggestion that was made by the gentleman that I was a cub."

Cox (in a pacific mood)—"I withdraw them. It is not worth while to take them down."

Hale (in a belligerent mood)—"I am willing to put 'cub' against them."

Cox—"That's a small business, it is only copying a few words."

The chairman inquired from Garfield whether he withdrew his call for the offensive words to be reduced to writing.

Garfield said he would not insist on it.

Cox—"I was only provoked into it."

using them by the very unparliamentary language of my friend from Maine. He had no right to attribute to me any severity. I never obeyed the behests of Southern men. All through the war I stood by my country. He had no right to indulge in that. I never voted for Southern claims. I did not vote either for the continental bill. Did the gentleman vote for it?"

Hale—"I did."

Cox, triumphantly—"You voted for it this session, but last year you voted against it, and gave good reasons for it, too."

Hale rose to make a remark.

Cox—"You sit down, if you please."

Hale—"I have good reasons for both votes."

Cox—"Now keep courteous."

The chairman interrupted the proceedings and said—"The Chair feels it is his duty to say emphatically, that in a dignified house, as this ought to be, this constant clapping of hands and cheering is unbecoming, and the Chair will appeal to the good sense and judgment and common civility and decency of the members in the body in asking them to refrain from it, and he will say to persons occupying seats in the galleries, that if they attempt it the Chair will at once order the galleries to be cleared. The Chair cannot maintain order on the floor of the House unless every member observed the dignity and courtesy appropriate to the House of Representatives."

Cox said he entirely approved of the Speaker's ruling and asked what the democratic side of the House, after a hard struggle to get into power, after accusations, after a swinging, after prodigality, of many years, never straight, always crooked, on your side of the House (republican) and on the part of the administration done in here with one little bill for West Point, not seeking to reduce expenditures beyond what they were in 1877, it is opposed by republican economists, casting their own words and going back on their own record. In the name of the people who are distressed by the name of the House, everywhere, I protest in one word against the whole body of that side of the House, as waiting in fair and square economy. All your platforms favor retrenchment and the people cry for it every where, and yet on the very first opportunity, when there is a honest bill brought in which cuts down luxuries living at West Point, the whole body of republicans fly in the face of their own platform and of their previous record.

Congress and Garfield opposed reductions and Lamar favored them.

Hale defended himself from the charge of inconsistency, brought against him by Cox in voting against the Centennial bill last Congress and for it this Congress, and apologized for his unparliamentary language.

Cox—"The gentleman from Maine began these personal remarks by remarking that these were matters over me."

The committee proceeded to vote on the amendments. Hamilton's amendment, making the pay of cadets $540, without additional ration, was agreed to. All other amendments, either in regard to cadets or professors were voted down. Without disposing of the bill the committee rose.

Barnum offered resolutions for appointing a committee of seven to take order for superintending the funeral of H. H. Starkweather, late member of the Connecticut, who died in Washington this morning, that his remains be removed to Norwalk, Conn., under charge of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and attended by the committee, and that, as an additional mark of respect, the House adjourn.

The resolutions were agreed to. Barnum, Garfield, Wheeler, Phelps, Hoar, Landers (Conn.), and Ash were appointed such committee, and the House adjourned.

About the Burglars.

It is now believed that the loss by the robbery of the Northampton national bank will exceed a million dollars, and a very large amount, perhaps one-half of the stolen securities are negotiable. It has been suggested that the burglar rode from Springfield to Northampton on Tuesday night with a fast team, engaged at Burns' livery stable about midnight, and that he and his said they wanted to go to a surprise party to Holyoke. When the team was returned on Wednesday morning, the horses showed signs of hard driving and were very much exhausted. The hostler gives a very clear description of the man who returned the team, and is a man of about 35 years of age, of medium height, and of a dark complexion. He is a native of New England, and has been in the service of the military business. He is a man of about 35 years of age, of medium height, and of a dark complexion. From Maine Whiskey Indictments and Southern Business.

CHICAGO, 28.—This p. m. the grand jury in the U. S. Court came into the courtroom and presented a new batch of indictments.

Said, in answer to an inquiry of Judge Hodgson, that they retired to their room. One of them is against H. B. (Buffalo) Miller, and Frederick L. Reed, his son-in-law, another against Senator Powell, Geo. H. and Thos. F. Bailey, another against Orlando B. Dickinson, Jonathan Abbe, and Geo. F. Burroughs. Two are against Edward F. Lawrence, James M. Ballantine, and Jno. Robinson.

Each of the indictments contains several counts. They are all substantive and like in their averments. They charge the defendants named with having during 1874 and 1875 removed large quantities of distilled liquors from their distilleries to some place to the jurors unknown without having paid the U. S. tax thereon.

Counts are specified in the different counts and run all the way from $1,000 to $100,000. There are also charges of conspiracy to defraud the U. S. of its revenue, with certain parties named, being for the most part persons who have already pleaded guilty. Judge Blodgett voted the amount of bail be required of each of these defendants at $5,000.
