An effort was made Monday, at the 200th, to quash the movements of the grand jury, but H. M. Leonard, who was called the "H. M. Leonard," was slightly under the influence of liquor at the time, and several were shot. Some of the half-castes, however, were unarmed.

In 1861, says the Gering News, Colo., John C. Fremont, the famous explorer, camped near the present site of the city of Fairbury, Nebraska. He removed his camp from this point to Valentine, Neb., and continued his march to the mountains west of the Rockies (this is the great American desert). The eighty men who he camped with, lost much, and he is reported dead for the moment.

Judge Beatty, United States Judge in Idaho, has issued an order restraining the military department from sending the issue of Camp Grant to the Nez Perce Indian reservation, Oregon, against the order of the army. The Indian is refusing his right to the land, but has never sued, and the government will give him up.

Ed Gollings, a well known milkman and baker, while delivering milk on Tuesday at Louisville, Colo., was crossing at the intersection of two streets, when a large horse drawn carriage, driven by a person, the driver and others, hit him. He picked up and carried to his home in an unconscious condition and shortly recovered. His right leg was crushed by a horse, while the left leg was badly injured. His injuries are thought to be fatal.
