

SALT LAKE MAY LAND BIG FIGHT

ominant Salt Lake Business Men Make Offer of $100,000 for Jeffries-Johnson Championship Battle.

salt Lake City has broken into the magnifico meetings and bids for the Jeffries-Johnson Society's championship battle. A number of prominent business men got together Friday night and within a short time it was agreed to offer the principals a purse of $100,000. The movement is headed by A. Fred Wey and the following telegram was sent to Jeffries Friday night:

"A. Fred Wey backed by business offers $100,000 for the Jeffries-Johnson contest. Consider Salt Lake an applicant for the fight."

Those interested in the movement say that the proposition is a good one as investment, and that if the fight is staged here it will bring a great deal of money to the city and advertise Salt Lake throughout the world. "I have studied the matter carefully for some time," said Mr. Wey, "and I am convinced that if the fight is held here it will be a great thing for Salt Lake."

of course, at the very start there may be some objection based on moral grounds. But at that, there are probably 25 cities bidding for it, including San Francisco, Los Angeles, Portland, Seattle, Goldfield and Denver. These cities are perhaps all as moral and as good as we are. So far as the evil effects go, I talked the matter over with a number of prominent business men in San Francisco, after the Johnson-Ketchel fight, and they all spoke of the material benefit to business obtained through the attraction of thousands of moneyed visitors. There was no indication that moral standards had been lowered.

"When I thought what the value of the advertising would be, I concluded we might as well get in line and try to get the right here."

If the people don't want it, of course, that's another proposition, and we don't want the fight. If the objection is too great we will have to drop the matter. But, I think as long as other towns are out after it we might as well get it if we can."

The benefits to be derived from having the fight here are greater than most people realize. The scene of the fight will be advertised the world over, and the publicity will last a year or more afterwards through the medium of the moving pictures of the contest.

"We have made the offer of $100,000, and should it be necessary to do so, more we are prepared to do that. Salt Lake has an excellent prospect of being the choice, as one of the principals has already intimated that he would prefer this city if the fight could be arranged here."

OH? IF JEFF FAILS!!

For some long months I've traveled with the gang that didn't think that Jeff would try to put J. Arthur Jackson on the blink; but now they've signed the manuscript—the marks of both are there. With all that "pipe the seal herewith" and "I do hereby swear" the question now that worries me, just think of what a smoke the gang would get if Jeff should fail to pull away the Smoke.

Sometimes I wish they'd change the rules and make them read instead. That everything is fair in war but hitting on the head. If some wise bird would urge the brows to drop the Dixon line. Until it reached the ankle, we'd be sure to trim the shine: But as she says, I hesitate—perhaps we may go broke—

I think, if Jeff should fail to pull the curtains on the Smoke. I pinned our faith to Ketchel in a near half-breed way. I pinned that he would pull a punch that might bring home the pay; he watched the way that Shadow in the land of Kangaroos signed Tommy Burns the nightcap, and we felt that we were stews. But now we have one best host—big Jeff now wears the yoke. So, so! Where can we beat it if he fails to clean the Smoke?

THREE STAR BASEBALL PLAYERS WHO MAY FIGURE IN TRADES SHORTLY.

Through the hat, ball, mask and paraphernalia which go to make up the game of baseball have been cast for another season, the fan is left with the rest which he dreams to have. The shutter which lends color to the scene off season gives the more silent enjoyment of the national pastime. It was thought about sooner or later, but it has been delayed. In fact, since the players have chosen sides for 1910, the American League had the White Sox to victory. Chicago has obtained Hugh McLean, Washington McAleer, St. Jack O'Connor and Boston Pat

STARS OF THE MICHIGAN AND PENNSYLVANIA ELEVENTHS THAT CLASH TODAY AT PHILADELPHIA.

Despite the fact that Michigan met defeat at the hands of Notre Dame recently, the followers of the Wolverines are confident that their favorites will defeat Pennsylvania when the two teams clash on Franklin Field, Philadelphia, today. The only apparent effect the defeat at the hands of Notre Dame has had on the Michigan eleven is to rid the Wolverines of whatever complacency caused them the ease with which Syracuse was mauled. The team, with the exception of Burlesque, who is out for the season with a broken collarbone, came out of the contest in good shape, and the Wolverines will present practically their full strength against Pennsylvania. Elmer Edmunds or Bertand will replace Burlesque at end. Casey having announced that he would play the remainder of the season, thereby settling the uncertainty as to the occupancy of left tackle. The overwhelming defeat inflicted by Michigan upon Syracuse recently has given the football critics much food for reflection. The question arises whether that loss will uphold its ancient prestige when the teams meet in the annual combat. The west will be well represented by one of the best balanced teams that have ever been turned out by the American and African institutions. In the Syracuse game the western aggregation showed a varied attack, combining the best elements of the new and old games. Pennsylvania, after a severe slump suddenly came to life against the Indians under the magic leadership of Captain Miller, was well reinforced as quarterback. His generalship was the best that has been displayed on the Penn field this year. The Pennsylvania line is one of the best balanced in the country and should take care of the western eleven's forwards. The probable line-up of the Penn eleven is as follows: Penn—Brodhead, left end; Clegg, left tackle; Dietrick, left guard; Cozens, center; Lamberton, right guard; Ferrier, right tackle; Large, right end; Miller, captain; quarterback; Young, left halfback; Hellman, right halfback; Scott, fullback; Michigan—Barney, left end; Case, left tackle; Brookbank, left guard; Watkins, center; Conner, right guard; Wells, right tackle; Miller, right end; Wasmund, quarterback; Magdison, left halfback; Allred, captain; right halfback; Lawton, fullback.

The little German gazed at his place of business, which was now burning quite briskly, and said:

"No, I sindt huri. But I got out

CHAMPIONSHIP OF THE MIDDLE WEST

Madison, Wis., Nov. 12.—The football championship of the middlewest probably depends on the game to be played in Madison tomorrow between Minnesota and Wisconsin. Both teams have thus far won six games, the Badgers having largely favored Minnesota, although Wisconsin's line is slightly stronger. Minnesota, however, has more individual stars, and has defeated its previous opponents by larger scores than Wisconsin.

GREAT SALVATOR MADE RECORDS

While Yet a Three-Year-Old He Landed Some Remarkable Winnings—Honored After Death.

Lexington, Ky., Nov. 12.—Salvator, 22-year-old son, by Imp. Prince Charlie and Samna, by Lexington, died as a result of paralysis and indomitable will to continue to have an interest in the race track. The stable in which Salvator died is within a stone's throw of the spot upon which he was foaled as the property of Daniel Swigert, April 26, 1886.

Haggan ordered that Salvator's feet be amputated and directed that nothing be prepared for him but gravy and beer near Green Hills, in which the famous racer immortalized in song and story, was buried. Later it was Haggan's intention to erect a granite shaft at the grave.

Salvator, in his three years on the turf, started in 18 races, won 16, was second in one, third once and fourth once. His aggregate winnings were $11,110. He made his first start in the Juvenile stakes at Monmouth park, Aug. 12, 1888. The race was won by Proctor Knott and it was the only one in which Salvator was ever unplaced.

Proctor Knott beat him again by half a length in the futurity.

The following year he finished third to Longstreet and Proctor Knott in the race for the Omnibus stakes. He won the Flathead, Maple, Tuckashie, and Tishen stakes as a 2-year-old and the Tishen Registration, Lorillard, Jersey handicaps, Fortunate, Larkspur, and two purse races as a 3-year-old.

He began his 4-year-old form by winning the Suburban handicap, followed by the memorable match for $2,000 a side, in which he beat Teeny a nose over the mile and a quarter route, walked over for the Monmouth cup, beat Tomey four lengths for the Champagne stakes, and closed his career by running a mile on the straight course at Monmouth park, June 25, which stands today as the American record of the stud, however, Salvator was not a great success. The best of his get was the futurity winner, Savable. For the last four or five years he has been a pensioner at Elmendorf.

Salvator was foaled in the year which is famous in the history of the American turf for the number of great thoroughbreds which were bred—1888. This is the year in which Longstreet, Oregon, Budding, Spokane, Dahlia, Marion C and a number of other famous horses, including Proctor Knott, were foaled. Of all those no two were more famous than Salvator and Proctor Knott. The names of these two were linked in verses that every man, woman and child knew 21 years ago.

Salvator and Proctor Knott met in the futurity in 1888. An enormous crowd was on hand to witness the race, nearly all of it being divided between these two starters. With 122 pounds up and Jockey Barnes on his back, Proctor Knott won from Salvator, which carried 108 pounds.

THE NEW CITY OF PEKIN.

No one who knew the old Pekin of pre-Boxer days can be in any doubt as to the answer to the question. The old order passed—nay, has already passed. Outward and visible changes are conspicuous at the very first glance. The railway from Tientsin has torn a breach through the outer wall of the Chinese city, and the train, whistling past the temple of heaven, pulls up just outside the great Chien-men gate of the Tsin-ku city, almost within sight of the dilapidated roofs of the inner imperial city. European quarters, with Japanese jinrikishas have to a great extent displaced the old springless Pekin cart, and a few minutes' drive along a good road now brings one to the British legation, one of the few buildings in the European quarter which has survived the storm and stress of the Boxer rebellion. Even those legations which were not hopelessly damaged during the siege have for the most part been pulled down to make way for new and more stately edifices, erected at a lavish expenditure out of the proceeds of the indemnity imposed on China. With their extensive compounds and the spacious quarters provided for the foreign garrisons, the representatives of most of the powers—and not only of the great powers—possess today in Pekin far more imposing residences than any of their ambassadors in the chief European capitals. As the cost of living has increased considerably and the salaries have not been raised, the change is not, perhaps, one which they altogether appreciate. Foreign banks and foreign shops have followed suit, and the Wagons-lits company has built one of its usual palace hotels, which, by the way, is always crowded. As one looks down upon it today from the old walls, the foreign quarter, in which no Chinese is now allowed to reside unless in the service of foreigners, stands with its broad military girdle separating it from the rest of the Tartar city and its shambolic system of defenses, a very magnificent spectacle which must afford to all observers, and more especially to the Chinese, much food for reflection both on their artistic merits of compound architecture and upon the political wisdom of their statecraft.

In conversation with Oberst, I happened to mention the European quarter among the many interesting changes which had occurred since my last visit to Pekin. He replied, with an inscrutable smile, but it cannot be half an interest to you, that in the year when the hill, Sir Claude Macdonald, did not have services that insertion in the wall of your station, it is 200 large enough over the diplomatic quarter—in her and sister.

Political changes are by no means confined to the European quarter. Most of the great thoroughbreds in the Chinese and the Tartar classes have been unseated, and many of them have been planted with trees. Besides the northern line from Tientsin and Mandchou, two other lines of railway have run into Pekin, the capital taken from Tsin-ku, on the Yang-tze, and another to the west, built entirely by Chinese enterprise, which already pierces the Great Wall and within a few weeks will have reached Kalgan. Electric light is supplied throughout the capital and water is now being laid down in pipes. The railway hills, the unwieldy and chaotic traffic of former times has been got under control, and is regulated with considerable efficiency by a smart khaki-coated police force, of which I shall have more to say on another occasion. The streets are altogether much better kept, and though the hill roads and alleys still remind one of the old days of Pekin, there has evidently grown up among all classes a new sense of cleanliness and public decency conforming to new social standards.—Correspondence, London Times.
