THE EVENING NEWS.

Friday, - - - June 28, 1872.

A NIGHT EDITOR'S STORY.

My story is a ghost story, and one of the genuine articles, I conclude, from putting together my pre-conceived ideas of ghosts, and the particular experience I have to relate on this occasion. It is an experience so strange, so terrible, and so fraught with poignant grief, that for a long time after its occurrence I shrank from all mention of it; but time, the great alleviator, enables me now to sit down and give a calm account of the events to which I refer.

I was night editor on the Hawbuck Morning Sentinel. My associate in the local department was Ward Sutfin, a young fellow of keen perceptions, ready wit and active ability. He had clear eyes, a concentrative brow, a rather pale complexion, a long, flaring, jet-black moustache, and an open, wide-awake look that was a faithful index of his character. Nothing escaped his observation. He was indefatigably industrious, and picked up all the news, delving out items from the most apparently barren ground. He was the best local we had ever had, and our department of city news, soon after his advent, outstripped those of all our contemporaries in variety and spice.

Ward had one fault, however. The social bowl possessed powerful attractions for him, and it was too evident that he had been imbibing more freely than a sound judgment would dictate. To be sure he was seldom unfitted for business,—not more than once in three or four months, perhaps,—but he was pursuing a path which, if persisted in, must, I endeavored to persuade him, result in his downfall. I talked to him often about it, but, although he always listened pleasantly, my words seemed to be uselessly expended. He was always the same free and easy, light-hearted, convivial fellow, and hard-working, valuable assistant.

He would frequently choose a topic of popular interest and write thereon a series of descriptive articles in a free, gossipy vein, just calculated to catch the public attention. This was in addition to his regular work as city editor. The amount of labor he accomplished, and the ease with which he performed it, frequently filled me with astonishment.

Well do I remember when he choose for his theme "Dregs and Scum." He penetrated the vilest haunts of the lowest classes, and described their habits in a wonderfully vivid manner. Their vices, their misfortunes, the bright spots in their lives, together with scraps of adventure and incident,—exciting, amusing, and pathetic,—were all treated with rare spirit and grace by his ready pen.

Of course in this pursuit he visited the resorts of thieves, villains, and desperadoes, and plunged into scenes against his safe exit from which there were many chances.

"We will see what we can fish up from the slime," he would say with a mocking laugh, and start off on one of his midnight excursions. Or again he would announce that he had an appointment to meet some distinguished friends, the true purport of which remark we all well understood.

Ward and I, when at work, occupied a room by ourselves, while the managing editor, and Bailey, his assistant, had another apartment, just across the hall.

One night, about half past 11, Ward said to me:

"Well, Peck, I guess I'll go out and see what I can see. I've sent in a couple of columns, and Dobbin will be on the look-out to report if anything turns up. I'll be back by half past 1 or 2."

Dobbin was a middle-aged, seedy individual, of some ability, but no particular occupation, who loafed around the office most of the time, in readiness to assist, for a small remuneration, in any department that happened to be crowded. He frequently lent his aid to Ward in reporting police cases, accidents, rows, and the like.

"Hold on, Ward," I said, looking him in the face; "hadn't you better wait until to-morrow night?"

"Why? Oh! I know; you think I'm not exactly well-balanced. But I'm all right. I'm just in the mood for it to-night, too."

"Yes, you always are, for that matter. Where do you propose to go to-night?"

"Down to Muggins' Forks."

The very worst place in the city! The concentration of vile and desperate lawlessness.

"You are not in earnest, Ward. You are not going there to-night, are you?"

"That's just where I am going. You know their great mogul, Barney Buck, is awaiting for trial for that highway-robbery scrape, and I want to hear their comments. Jove! won't it be a rich treat?"

"I heard they were going to have a talk about it."

"Yes, Muggins' Forks is to hold an indignation meeting. Ha! ha!

"Well, Ward, I wouldn't go, that's all."

"Well, Peck, I don't want you to go, but I'm going."

"You may take this, if you want it," and I unlocked a drawer, and drew out a six-shooter.

"No!" he exclaimed, laughing in scorn.

"You had better take it."

But he persisted in declining.

"Very well, have your own way. But be cool, and keep a sharp lookout. And, promise me one thing, Ward; that you will not drink anything more to-night—at least until you get back."

He had been slowly moving toward the door, and now rushed out suddenly, exclaiming, with a laugh,

"All right. I guess not."

After he was gone, I moved uneasily in my chair for some minutes, and at last with an effort, bent myself to the work before me. Presently Bailey came in on an errand.

"Where's Sutfin?" he said.

"Don't ask," I replied.

"Oh!" he exclaimed with a scowl.

"Be gone long?"

"Till half past one, I said."

"Well, I hope he'll get back." And with the last word the door swung shut, as Bailey retired.
